Like the Connollys, the Agostinis are making a big career change after moving from Harrisburg, Pa., 18 months ago. Richard Agostini is a retired insurance executive; Eileen was an assistant director of a fine arts gallery and a corporate art consultant for 10 years in the Pennsylvania capital.

"This will be the type of gallery I worked in before," Eileen Agostini says, "but we'll be celebrating the arts of New England." She says they chose the Plymouth site because of the tourism America's hometown draws, especially during the summer. The shop will feature original art, limited edition prints, graphics and serigraphs as well as fine American handcrafts, including pottery, glass and pewter.

Art at the new Gallery By-The-Sea will include sailors' valentines by Duxbury's Sandy Moran.

Also for sale will be unique sailor's valentines by Sandy Moran of Duxbury and Florida.

visit its main street shops. "The harbor is always beautiful. It's a draw and I think it is known as the sixth best harbor in the Northeast. It's known now as a docking area."

"In a way, we all compete for the same thing but we all have our specialties," says Irving Versoy of Greenhouse Antiques, 182 First Parish Road. He specializes in lighting and clocks, including repair and restoration, and runs a mail-order business for Aladdin kerosene lamps. Items in his store include early oil and electric lighting such as pull-down parlor lamps, Tiffany lamps and table lamps, and early clocks: banjo, tall, schoolhouse and mantle clocks. Rather than deal in large furniture, Versoy says he might have some "smalls" on hand.

Alexis Andrews, too, deals in smalls at her 91 Front St. Stained Glass & More by Alexis. As her store name implies, she creates custom-designed stained glass on the premises — "that's what gets me through the winter" — and also offers work by local artisans: Vickie Kusleika's baskets, Maureen Cunio's pottery, Marj Bates's jewelry and glass knobs, and Ruth Rosenthal's jewelry. She will feature an artist of the month, beginning April 4 with Tamara Orlowsky of Norwell.

Ralph Fisher has found relief from Army retirement at Timekeepers, the clock repair, antique and gift shop he runs with his wife, Elinor.

Other Front Street shops vary in character: Echo Lake carries 18th, 19th and 20th century pine, oak and mahogany pieces as well as china and silver, and Harry McLaughlin provides furniture refinishing. Bird-in-Hand specializes in primitive and country furniture as well as in Parkhurst's interest in folk art, and Needful Things offers a wide variety of furniture as well as new items, gifts and cards. Noble describes the Quarterdeck's contents as college shop, although she is known for her postcards: a Titanic card just sold for more than $200.

After losing their lobster boat in last year's April Fools storm, the Ferwerdas opened Calico Attic, intending to specialize in clocks. Instead, Diane says, their selection is eclectic. "I wanted to touch everybody. I like kitchen gadgets. I wanted to be affordable, carry new with the old."

Elinor and Ralph Fisher, who run Timekeepers, 366 Gannett Road, were looking for something to do after Ralph's retirement from the Army. He had always repaired clocks, and Elinor, also retired from running the officers' club, was interested in antiques and collectibles. Opening their Timekeepers in 1992, they headed to Europe to fill the shop but now stick to Massachusetts. Over the years, the business has come to focus on gifts and clock repair.

"We joined with the others to tell people that we're here, come to Scituate and see what we have," Elinor Fisher says. "We also want to include our local people — we can't forget them."

A guide to antiquing the South Shore

OR HOW TO FIND ADVENTURE IN COLLECTIBLE HISTORY

By Stacey K. Powers
CORRESPONDENT

Antique shopping is, in itself, an adventure for the most avid treasure-seekers and history-lovers. To some, there is no better adrenaline rush than the excitement of stumbling upon a special find.

That find can happen in today's antique store.

Like the wares that are displayed in them, the stores are unique in their own right. Many store owners are known for combining their own special interests with what they show in their stores. Some are full-service interior design shops, mixing together a little bit of this and a little bit of that to create a blend of old and new, complementing any style and pocket book.

COUNTRY HOUSE ANTIQUES & INTERIORS

Country House Antiques & Interiors in Cohasset is a full-service shop that features European imported pine and oak country antiques and accessories, custom upholstered furniture and draperies, and an Oriental rug gallery right on the premises. A 20-year veteran in the antiques industry, owner Arlene Ferreira added decorating to her list of accomplishments five years ago, responding to the needs of customers seeking a unique look, antique or not. Offering oil paintings, lamps and mirrors along with an abundance of antique armoires outfitted for today's uses, mainly entertainment centers, Country House imports most of its pieces from Denmark, England and France. In addition, Country House customizes pine tables with new and old wood that is hand-waxed and distressed to create an old, antique look.

A collector herself, Ferreira sells antique, silver-plated Kate Greenaway figural napkin rings. "These are very collectable," she says, noting that she has about three dozen in her own private collection.

DILLON & COMPANY

At Dillon & Company, Jill Dillon has created a haven for out-of-the ordinary English country antiques in her quaint, brightly painted Plymouth Center shop. A native of England, Dillon first came to Boston 14 years ago, following her success in the business in England, France and New Jersey Once established here, she simultaneously operated a Newbury Street store and a shop in Plymouth with partners under the name Dillon, Meyers & Meyers. During the late '80s, she went out on her own. "We focus mainly on large pieces of furniture such as hutches and armoires, as well as handpainted mirrors from Florence, Italy, and architectural pieces from English gardens," she says.

Country House Antiques features a selection of pine furniture in the Cohasset store.

Jill Dillon travels to Europe to supply her Plymouth Dillon & Company with antiques such as this French fruitwood table, circa 1850.

Every six weeks, Dillon makes a trip to England and France where she relies on a network of people who hand-pick each piece of furniture and accessory for her careful inspection. She returns with a 40-foot container filled to the max with 200 pieces of furniture made up of 90 percent antiques and 10 percent old-wood reproductions.

A particularly unusual piece is an English coffer, resembling a modern-day hope chest, that features a readable page from an actual newspaper dated 1797 that, lining the coffer, infused with the wood. Other accessories include rustic French pottery, barley twist candlesticks, English tapestries, antique tea tins and upholstered footstools.

KEARNEY'S KOLLECTABLES

There is something for everyone at Kearney's Kollectables and its discount store, Kearney's Korner, both located in Marshfield and occupying space in three store fronts. Co-owners Barbara Kearney and Jim Carreiro opened Kearney's Kollectables three years ago and expanded into discount furniture and accessories just six months ago.

"Everybody wants a bargain," Kearney says. "We saw a need develop from our many cottage shoppers who are interested in buying everyday type things such as plates, lamps, ashtrays, old books and good, solid used furniture that just needs some fixing up." Kearney's sells the do-it-yourself pieces at a very low price, allowing the buyer to transform a gently worn piece of furniture into a stunning, like-new labor of love.

In the main store, shoppers will find furniture that ranges in style from art deco to Victorian to classic '40s and '50s hutches, tables, bureaus and art work as well as vintage clothing and accessories.

One interesting piece in the store is an art deco entertainment center featuring a working, electric fireplace, a bar complete with glasses, and a radio and old-fashioned turntable. Kearney's also features a large selection of handmade as well as antique walking sticks.

VICTORIA'S BY THE SEA

Across from Cohasset Harbor, Victoria's By The Sea welcomes shoppers into its multi-dealer showrooms that, according to owner Victoria Chin, "combine the past with the present."

That it does. Featuring Victorian, country, primitive, custom and reproduction furniture alongside sculptures, lamps, architectural, garden and collector items as well as original paintings by local artists, Chin has managed to offer clients decorating and designing services to boot. "Antique chandeliers, china and glassware are some of my favorite things," says Chin, who opened her own shop five years ago, having grown up in a family-owned custom furniture business.

Chin keeps a "wish book" of customers' sought-after items that she keeps an eye out for. She acquires most of her pieces from estate liquidations and buy-outs from local homes as well as from Cape Cod, Vermont, Maine and Canada, and she will be going to France in July.

March is markdown month at Victoria's and there are some great bargains to be found, such

ENLIGHTENING — AND WORTHY

Its nickname is "the ugly lamp," but owner Sue Leslie admits, "When it is all lit up, it really is pretty." Still, Leslie wasn't expecting much when she took the lamp to the Hanover Chamber of Commerce's appraisal fund-raiser earlier this month. A chamber member, she grabbed the lamp for auctioneer/appraiser Joan Caddigan's opinion on her way to volunteer at the event. The lamp, to Leslie's surprise, is valuable.

A Pairpoint Puffy, made by the Cape Cod glass company, the shade is painted glass, Leslie describes; the base is brass — "not a lot were made with brass" — and is signed — "that was the clincher."

Caddigan has been in the auction and appraisal business for 20 years. A Hanover chamber member herself, she says the proceeds from the appraisals will go to the organization's scholarship fund. She does appraisal fund-raisers and charitable auctions from time to time. "Some wonderful things can come through the door," she says.

With or without her lamp, Leslie says the appraisal fund-raiser was a lot of fun. "People bring in things in boxes and bags, wrapped in towels. You get to chat." And then, with any luck, you get to adjust your insurance policy.

FURNITURE CONSIGNMENT GALLERY

Located in Hanover, the Furniture Consignment Gallery is a four-floor source for traditional and contemporary furnishings at more and more affordable prices the longer they remain in the store. For each 30 days the item remains unsold, it is marked down 10 percent. "Things move quickly here — most don't stay long enough to make it to the markdown," explains manager Rich Quigley. Owned by Susan Fiore, the gallery typically features traditional mahogany and cherry wood as well as reasonably priced modern pieces.

In addition to the multitude of bedroom, kitchen and dining sets, the consignment gallery is host to many unique pieces, such as a late 1800s, handpainted blanket chest that was restored by a local artist. Another unique piece is a large, handpainted counter bar made with antique wood parts.

If you're in the market for a new desk, there was a beautifully carved, two-drawer mahogany claw foot library table and an antique, Victorian, floral-patterned camel back sofa, circa 1870.

SIMON HILL ANTIQUES

Snug Harbor in Duxbury is home to Simon Hill Antiques, a multi-dealer shop owned by Barbara Stevens and Terry Stevens featuring an extensive collection of 14 karat gold and sterling silver antique and used jewelry. A shop that buys as well as consigns, Simon Hill also has a huge collection of Irish Claddaugh rings, some with stones and some without. Also displayed are many locally crafted decoys, Oriental rugs, paintings, china and a bountiful collection of unique Christmas ornaments.

Throughout the South Shore, you are sure to find whatever you start out the day looking for and then some. Today's antique stores have something for everyone, and I guarantee you'll want to buy what you see.

Sewer battle is likely at town meeting

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES), a grass roots organization opposed to the town's sewer and wastewater management plans, is organizing a potentially powerful voting bloc and gearing up to defeat sewer articles at Saturday's town meeting. More than 90 people packed into the high school cafeteria last week as members of CEES and its consultants discussed the town's sewer and septic plans.

CEES's goal for town meeting is to defeat two articles asking residents to approve an additional $2.7 million for the North Cohasset sewer project because of higher than projected contract bids. The sewer commission wants voters to approve the additional funding to complete the North Cohasset project. CEES alsc wants to halt the implementation of the Second Amended Final Judgment for Agreement and septic system priority districts.

The battle lines have been drawn, but the outcome is uncertain. Town meeting voters will have the final say.

Lisa Bumstead serves as the group's public relations liaison. When asked, Bumstead stopped short of saying the group wants to sewer the entire town. But she did say CEES wants the town to look for

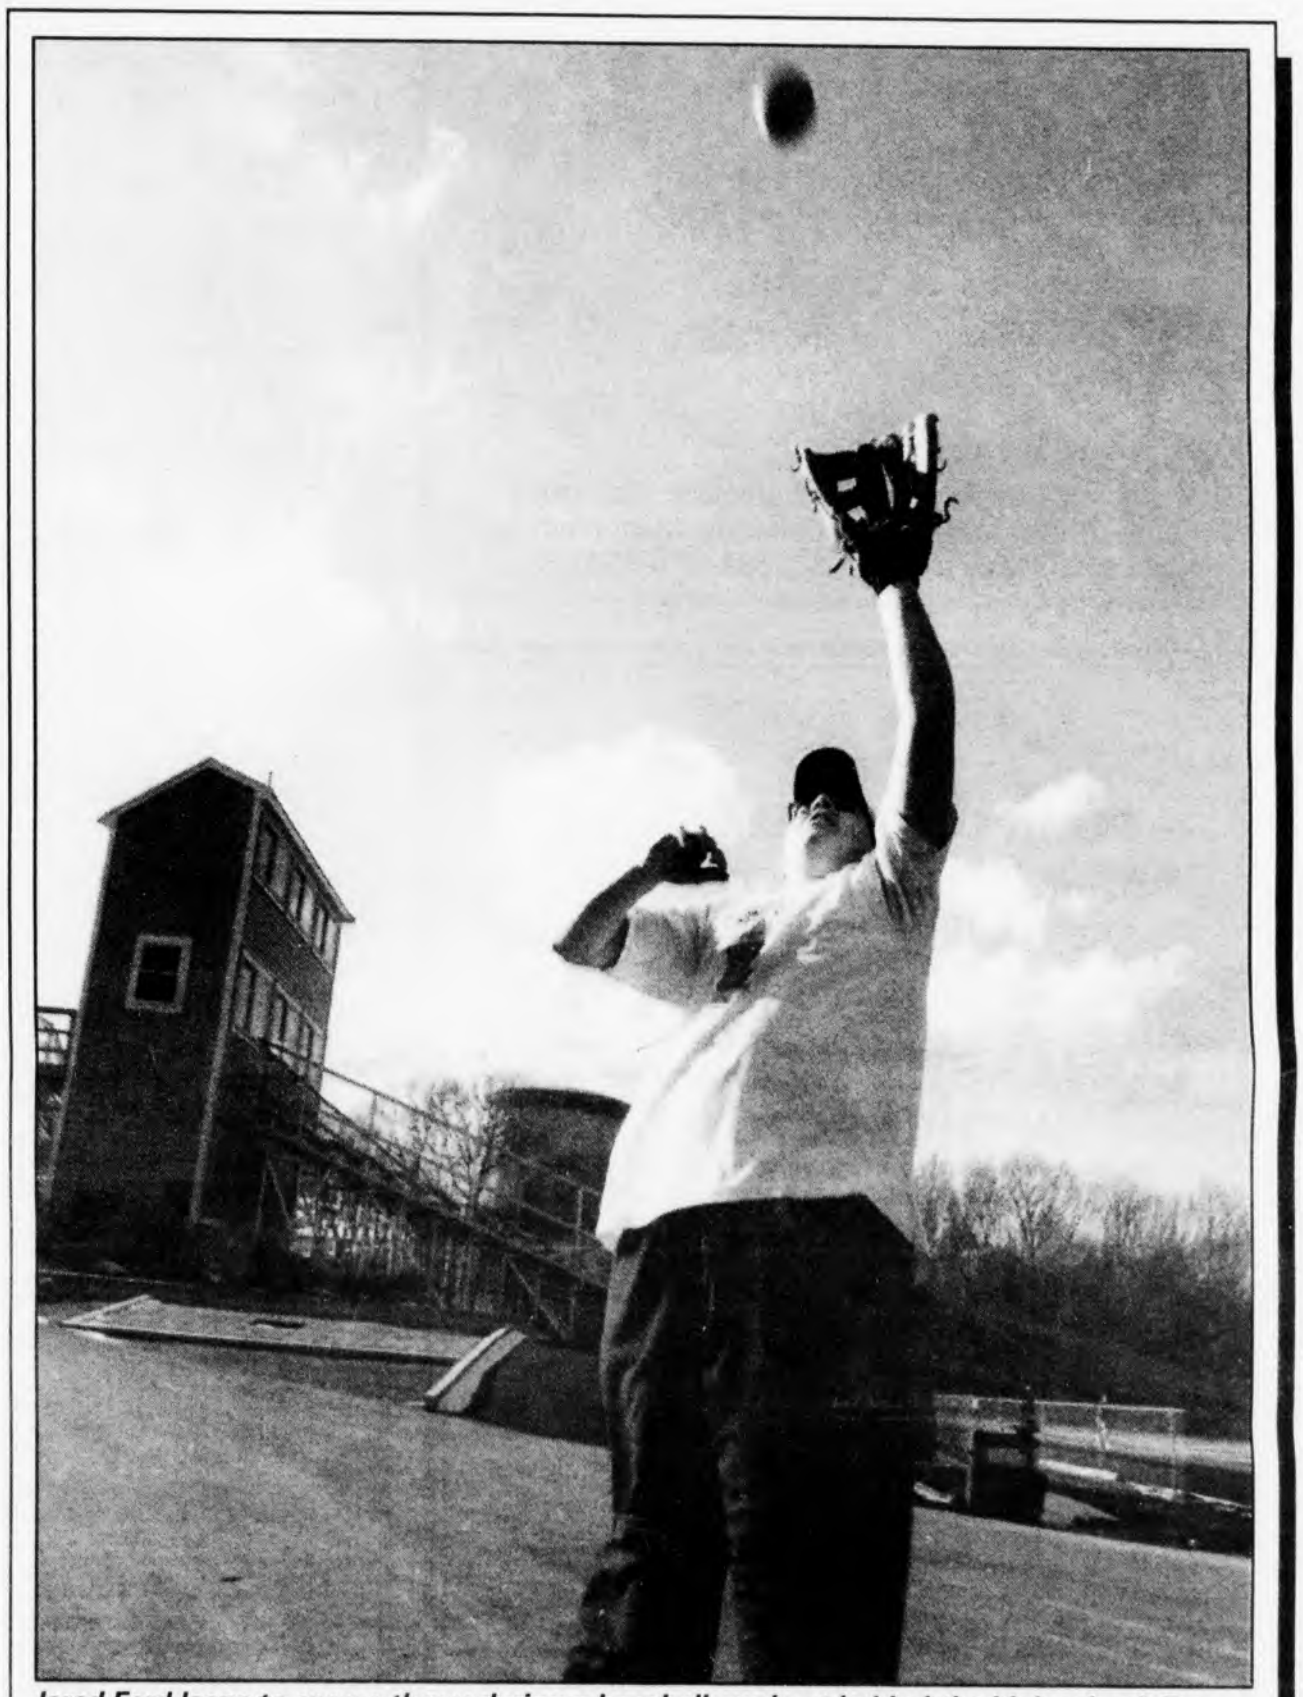
Sewer subsidy is a wallet issue



By Mary Ford

Just how good a deal state subsidy is for homeowners hooking up to the sewer seems to be at the heart of the controversy brewing in North Cohasset.

Selectmen grappled with how to handle the $2.7 million cost overrun of the North Cohasset sewer project again at their meeting Monday. Voters at Saturday's town meeting will be asked to appropriate the additional funds which would hook up about 200 homes in phases 3 and 4 of the project to the sewer line.

Selectmen aren't sure whether to recommend the additional appropriation which would bring

Marina land dispute could threaten harbor dredging

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A local businessman hopes the threat of controversy sinking the $1.34 million harbor dredging project will propel the town to resolve an old land dispute.

Owner of Cohasset Harbor Marina, Paul Trendowicz of Beach Street, wants the town to support realigning the federal anchorage in Bailey's Creek in front of his marina.

In a 4-1 vote on Monday — with Selectman Diane Sullivan dissenting — selectmen directed Town Manager Mark Haddad to work with town counsel, the harbormaster and harbor committee to seek a resolution to the matter. (See related story).

Trendowicz, who bought the former Figueiredo property several years ago, proposes moving the federal line of jurisdiction by 40 feet to improve the marina by providing more room for the marina's existing 45 slips and an additional 50 slips.

As it stands now, Trendowicz must remove the existing docks which encroach in the federal channel before the Army Corps of Engineers will dredge the harbor.

But Trendowicz claims he can prove he actually owns to the middle of Bailey's Creek and can get the federal anchorage area removed. If the town supports the 40-foot realignment of the federal area —which would have to be dredged at Trendowicz's expense because federal money cannot be used for private dredging projects — he would be willing to deed the remaining anchorage area to Cohasset.

The swap would ensure the dredging project goes forward as planned and would be beneficial to the town and to the marina because it would resolve the land dispute once and for all, Trendowicz claims.

Office buildings slated for driving range site

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Paul Barry, the owner of the Cohasset Heights landfill, will ask the planning board April 1 to approve a small new office development along Route 3A. Under review will be two single-story office buildings, parking for 190 cars and a 10,000 square foot auto repair facility. All are to be built on land now used by a golf driving range.

Barry and next-door businessman Wayne Sawchuk both say the new construction will improve the area. Sawchuk, who owns a brick office building next to the site, called it "a great idea." He said the development would take up only a small portion of "acres of land." He had no doubt the project would be "an asset."

But if the plan eventually spurs new questions about over-development in Cohasset, those questions will be coming about 45 years too late. According to planning board Chairman Al Moore, Cohasset's three-mile stretch of the road had its fate decided in 1954 when the town decided against putting a residential zone along Route 3. Ultimately, Moore said, if developments like Barry's continue, the town might

Cohasset professor pens techno-thriller

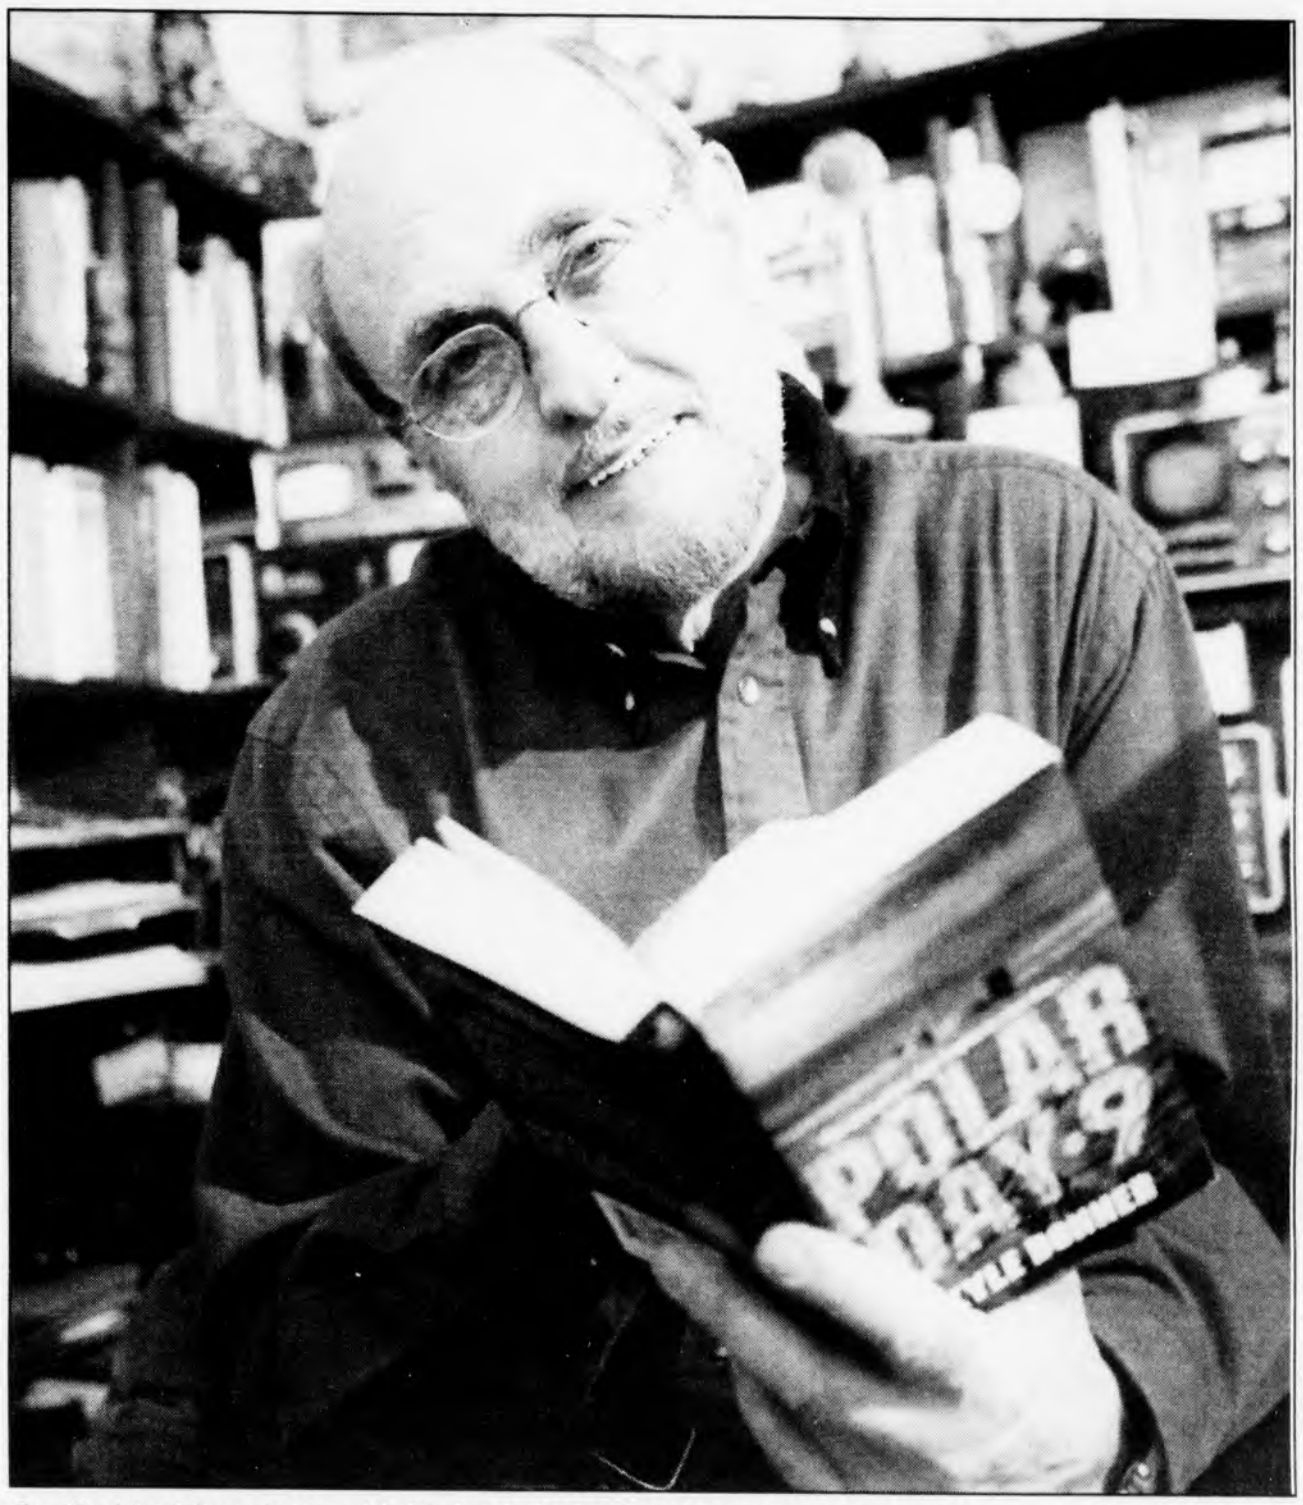
By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Imagine the second Ice Age is about to begin. To stop it, a super-weatherman has to be crafted to save the planet from a deep freeze. He is Dr. Cliff Lorenz, and he must smother doubts about his science before he plunges into the ultimate battle with nature. Though an expert in a new and dangerous technology to alter the earth's climate, he knows the limits of his knowledge. Lorenz already witnessed one disaster after a climate experiment failed. It will mean the end of the world if he fails now.

That is the synopsis of "Polar Day 9," the techno-thriller written by a Cohasset professor. Dr. Ubaldo DiBenedetto wrote the book under the pen name Kyle Donner. He is now being swamped with requests for the television and movie rights to his novel. Last week, DiBenedetto said he should know by June if he can strike a deal to sell his techno-thriller "Polar Day 9" to Universal Studios. The studio has amassed a record of international TV hits such as "Xena Warrior Princess" and "Hercules." If not, he has other producers' representatives looking to buy the option.

Ironically, DiBenedetto used episodes based on his own life in "Polar Day 9." He was a meteorologist in the U.S. Army during the Korean War. He spent most of the war in a flying weather station inside an army plane. Much of his work is still classified, but the weather research the army did then is still used as the basis for studies of changes in the earth's climate.

"In those days we used to hear about climate modifiers," he said. "Some are controlled by man. Some are not." For one long-standing instance of a human control, he said, governments sometimes try to make rain during droughts by "seeding" clouds with silver iodide. More recently, the Russian government has attempted to bring water and agriculture to the dry steppes in the south by re-routing some of the rivers. In "Polar Day 9," the project is more ambitious. The hero changes the entire world's weather patterns when he re-channels the Gulf Stream.



The story is based in science. It starts in California when a jolt along the San Andreas fault releases underground gases into the atmosphere. The underground gas contains crystalline particles. They block the sun's rays and plunge the earth into a freeze similar to the cold, dark world imagined after a nuclear war. DiBenedetto, who teaches Romance Languages and literature at the Harvard School of Continuing Education, tapped into a network of academic colleagues to make sure the science in the story is solid. He said the situation is similar to the earth's predicament after the Yucatan was struck by meteors approximately 60 million years ago.

"The dust, the smoke, the fire so darkened the sky, it was like winter," he said. Scientists generally agree the meteor strike spelled the extinction of the dinosaur and altered life on earth. Similarly, the escape of crystalline particles described in "Polar Day 9" could cause a "sudden drop in temperature," he said. DiBenedetto said a temperature drop followed a 1991 volcanic eruption in the Philippines.

"So much smoke and dust spewed out of it, it lowered the temperature by a centigrade degree. That's not much. But if it continued, it could have precipitated a cooling" of the earth's surface, he said. DiBenedetto also used his computer to construct the underwater mass, the hero used to split the Gulf Stream. His map of the underwater "hull" near New Brunswick is pure fiction, but he used his computer to calculate how water would be dispersed if the hull were really there. The calculations are accurate. The picture of the hull is framed and hung on the wall of the professor's study, along with academic certificates he has won as well as charts of the Renaissance world he has studied. In his home office on Jerusalem Road, the professor is surrounded by books and gadgets.

"It's like having friends you like, except they're silent," he said. Not all of them are silent, though. DiBenedetto's book shelves are crammed with things that beep, talk and whistle. He has a ham radio. He also has a computer with scanner, movie cameras and a weather machine. It reads out the temperature and other climate statistics inside and outside his house.

Protecting Spanish from computer words

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The sparkle long ago rubbed off the term Renaissance man. But Dr. Ubaldo DiBenedetto epitomizes the best spirit of the legendary individual proficient at both art and science, past and future, fiction and fact. "Polar Day 9" is not his only project. Along with culling movie script proposals, he is occupied with a new academic project related to linguistics. At stake this time is nothing less than the future of the Spanish language. DiBenedetto, who has already produced a Spanish-English dictionary, is a member of the Royal Academy of the Spanish language.

He has been charged with the task of translating into Spanish words used in the computer science field. Most are American-English words. The sheer volume of American coinages has threatened the purity of many Romance languages, including Italian and French.

"My God, what the Americans have developed," he said. If the Romance languages merely imported the American computer words, the practice might "open the floodgate" and clear the way for thousands more new words related to medicine, business, electronics and cable television. For instance, he said, the words "leader" and "manager" have already simply been adopted in Italy. The English words appear in newspaper articles and are no longer viewed as foreign words, like the way Americans use espresso. Other times, the words get a translation, but the Romance version is based too slavishly on the American model. The American "click," used to describe how to use a computer mouse, became "clicare" in Italian, due to the influence of Italian hackers rather than linguists. The sound of the word "clicare" does not belong in the language of Dante, he said.

"The Internet is in the hands of kids. They won't look in the dictionary."

— DR. UBALDO DIBENEDETTO

"The Internet is in the hands of kids," the professor sighed. "They won't look in the dictionary." He estimated half of the Italian web pages really consists of American-English words.

DiBenedetto also said the American computer coinages, though sometimes clever, vary in quality. For instance, he said, "click" has the virtue of sounding like the action it describes, and "feedback" is a good visual metaphor, too. But "desktop" really does not work that well to describe either a PC or its files. There is no good reason to import an unsatisfactory word.

"English has been very liberal in accepting words that are plain too awful to translate," he said. "But they have not accepted everything. Espresso is a good word. It sounds like coffee coming out in a hurry. But if the English has a good word for something already, the foreign word has not been accepted. They don't say "frezzio" when they mean a frieze."

DiBenedetto said the American advances in technology have spawned problems for undeveloped countries, too. Some countries did not even have electricity when multinational firms like Digital began shipping computers abroad. Digital followed the recommendation of language professors 15 years ago and published their technical manuals in English. He estimated there are hundreds of technical words in English that have been imported by languages, such as Chinese, that did not have a word to describe or define the machinery.

"There is proof this is what the whole world is coming to," he said, pointing to the airlines industry where English is now the official language, even in Italy. For safety and simplicity, companies are under pressure to "do away with the local language" and move to English.

"The problem is just beginning to reveal itself," he said. "We don't know how big the problem is yet." DiBenedetto said millions of people speak Spanish around the world. His task ultimately will mean coming up with words that can be accepted by all the different dialects and will not conflict with local usage customs or be offensive. Though a mammoth undertaking, the job has not daunted the professor. He said the Spanish language will survive better with its own words. If afterwards the Spanish writers keep choosing the English word, he will have failed.

be looking at more traffic signals and more lanes along Route 3A. But the opinion these changes will impact the town's "pastoral splendor" depends mostly on an illusion. The view roadside has long been a blend of strip malls, office buildings, backyards and wetlands.

"It's not as if something's being placed in an inappropriate location," he said. Moore also said it was more accurate to see new developments in the context of Route 3A's "redevelopment." Most of the new construction, such as the Stop & Shop and the Shaw's Supermarkets, have replaced blight. For instance, an abandoned car dealership was demolished to make way for the Stop & Shop. Shaw's took over a plaza that repeatedly failed septic system tests. The Barry project, replacing the driving range, offers an improvement but on a smaller scale than the supermarkets. He said the planning board could help push for aesthetic appeal by insisting on landscaping, green space and proper access.

"It's not as if we're tearing up virgin forest," he said. Moore said without doubt, the town would have made a better decision in 1954, if they had voted against the light industrial zone on Route 3A. But it would be unfair to change the zoning now. He also said traffic studies have shown a spike in the flow along Route 3A around morning and afternoon commutes. An office development might not increase the traffic during the peak hours, he said.

Barry also said Wednesday he doubted the project could be viewed as part of a trend that ultimately would transform Route 3A into a string of strip malls.

"My feeling about Route 3A in Cohasset is it is very much off beaten trail for business. I don't think you could draw anyone from Boston to build in Cohasset. To me it's more for local people to have a business in their own community." The preliminary plan he filed depicts one 4,000 square foot single-story office building, one 5,000 square foot single-story office building and the auto repair north of Crocker Lane. All will be visible from Route 3A since the land there is "all flat." He also said Wednesday he was not sure about the exact setbacks from the highway but could estimate the development would be at least 50 feet off the highway. Barry said as yet no official tenants had been signed for any of the buildings. He said the decision was made to build after numerous people indicated an interest in locating a business in the area.

Barry said he had purchased the property several years ago and cleaned it up.

"I've had that property five or seven years. When I took it over it was a junkyard. I cleaned it up." He said it had since been rented to the driving range. But the golf operation had not proved successful in his opinion. Though he did not go into details about the trust, he said he was not now the property owner.

Panel makeup for superintendent search

With the search for a new schools superintendent underway, the school board adjusted the composition of the 11-member panel that will interview the candidates. March 19, the school committee opted to cut the number of student representatives in half and insure a place for one delegate from the school councils. They also nominated Nancy Sandell to fill the slot for a former school board member.

The new formation calls for:

- one student,
- two teachers,
- two administrators,
- two parents,
- one school council member,
- one former school board member and
- two people chosen randomly from those who ask to serve on the interview board.

The 11 members will interview the pool of candidates whose resumes were previously selected by a consultant, James Hardy of the state association of school committees. Ultimatel the panel will rank the candidates.

The school board will conduct the finalist interviews. Board member Ralph Kidder said the interviews of the eight or ten semi-finalists would not be held until the beginning of May. The interviews with the semi-finalists and the finalists will be held in public, though the audience will not be able to ask questions. The school committee has sole authority to hire the superintendent.

The new superintendent will replace Stephen Hart. He is stepping down in August. The board intends to name Hart's replacement by the middle of June. They want the new superintendent to start work Aug. 3.

Seventh Annual Appalachia Yard Sale—April 4

As the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project gears up for its eleventh trip to help upgrade the homes of poor families in Appalachia, they eagerly approach their next fund-raiser: the Seventh Annual ASP Yard Sale.

The yard sale will take place on Voting Day from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, April 4 at the Second Congregational Church, right next door to the polling location (Town Hall). Items—no clothing, please—may be donated by bringing them to the church from Monday, March 30 through Friday, April 3, just prior to the sale. Pick up of heavier items can be arranged by calling us at 383-0345, faxing 383-7005 or E-mailing scc@dreamcom.net. And don't forget to come by and purchase those special treasures you simply must have—and at such a good price!

want. But vox populi, Vox Dei," he said, quoting the maxim that popular usage is ultimately viewed as the voice of God

"A country like France, like Spain, like Italy would rather have its own word that means "feedback," for instance. The trouble is, it doesn't usually come out as beautifully as "feedback" does in English. It may need two or three Spanish words to do it. The new coinage may conflict with the meaning of another existing word. But the mother language should be controlling the uniform standard. My sincere hope is the press and the writers of fiction and non-fiction will accept the new Spanish words as the standard."

Meanwhile, the appointment to the Royal Academy is a dream come true for him. He visited the academy in Madrid when he was a graduate student and remembers walking "on tiptoe" in a gallery above the room where a meeting of the members was in progress. He wished then he could be one of them. The wish became fact this year.

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches

We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

School board inks FY'99 budget

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The school board March 19 gave its conditional approval to a "very complicated" $8.17 million budget for the next school year (FY 99). The OK came with the proviso the school department could find $12,000 inside the budget (without increasing the bottom line) to fund the middle school athletics program. After the "no-cut" sports program started at the middle school this year, 105 of the 190 students turned out for fall teams. With that degree of success, the school board felt strongly the no-cut program should go on.

The new budget, a 7.5 percent increase over last year, will be voted on at town meeting Saturday. Schools superintendent Stephen Hart said Wednesday a corrected copy of the budget is now ready for the public's review. He said the summary budget that appears in the warrant is also accurate. Hart said it took a long time to come up with final numbers this year because so many changes were made to the "bottom line" figure.

After the town manager gives the school department the bottom line number, the superintendent is supposed to decide how the total gets distributed. Because the bottom line number changed several times, the whole budget came in for several substantial revisions. Hart said the process generated errors. This week some last-minute changes and corrections were made to numbers that spelled out how education at each school will be paid for. He said other mistakes, such as the error in the current year (FY 98) bottom line, had also been corrected. The superintendent also said there were more errors made in the budget this year than in past years, due to the changes made during the budget talks and the subsequent changes in the bottom line.

At the March 19 school board meeting, the Mariner drew fire for an advance report on the budget before the public hearing Thursday. School board Chairwoman Maureen Jerz said then the newspaper report "has a lot of errors from my point of view." In an interview Tuesday, she said she still preferred not to see the final budget numbers compared against the previous proposals. She said she liked a "more general" look at the budget that broke out the "things driving the budget up," such as salaries, student enrollments, new teacher hires due to enrollment and special education.

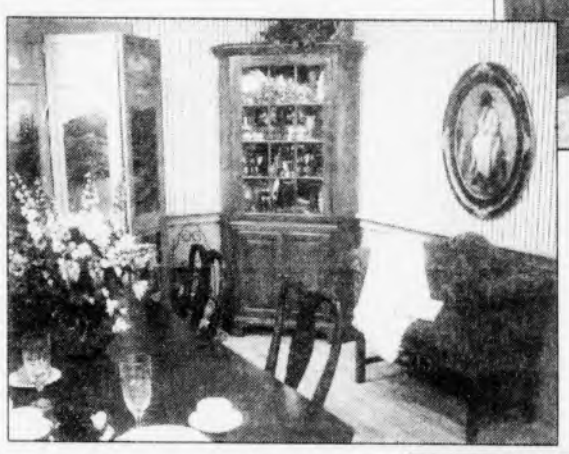
"This gives people the best indication of where it's at and why the school department pressed for a little more money this year. These are fixed costs, and there's not any flexibility" (in special education, for example). She also offered a reason why the school department and the board had more trouble with the budget this year than before.

"This year was different," said Jerz. "The bottom line changed dramatically over the course of December, January and February." In other years, the school board had been looking at much the same bottom line from the start of the budget talks to the finish. But this year the differences started with a budget five percent bigger than FY 98 but ended with a 7.59 percent increase.

"Every time the bottom line changed, the office had to change all the numbers across the board," she said. But historically, Jerz said she thought the school department had generally come in with accurate forecasts.

"In the past couple of years there were some overruns in special education and some variation in the other line items. But I think the forecasting generally is" (accurate).

Overall, Hart pointed to substantial increases in special education both inside and outside the district, except at the Osgood School. The special education total there went down by $5,000 because at least one student who needed classroom aides was to attend the Deer Hill School next year. (Hart also said an apparent.$30,000 cut in special education at the Deer Hill School was not a cut. The change was due to an "error early on" in which a $30,000 tuition credit was included in the special education line. He said the money subsequently had to be moved into a different line item.) Teacher assignments accounted for other big changes in the budget. At the high school, for instance, since the Project EXCEL program ended, the former EXCEL teacher was reassigned to half time in the world languages department and half time in social studies. He has since been appointed to a full time slot as a world language teacher. A similar change bumped up the fourth grade budget. After a teacher left Deer Hill, the replacement teacher had to be paid at a higher step. Moreover, next year, six, instead of five teachers, will get fourth grade assignments there, due to enrollment increases.



Maintenance increased 14 percent system-wide. He said some confusions about the percentage changes at each school were partly due to his later decision to spread the costs of grounds maintenance and one custodian's salary across all three schools. Previously, he said, he charged off the $14,000 grounds maintenance and the one custodian's salary entirely to the high school. He also confirmed the forecast for maintenance at the Osgood School reflected the janitors' salaries only. The school is being closed at the end of the school year. The janitors will work at the new school next year.

PREGNANCY AND BACK PAIN

Pregnant women soon find that natural hormones are released throughout their pregnancies for the purpose of relaxing ligaments and joints. The pelvis is particularly affected in this manner so that softened and stretched ligaments will allow the baby easier passage in labor. The price paid for an easier delivery is weakened sacroiliac joints, which can become painful when walking, standing or bending. The weight of the growing baby also weakens stomach muscles and places pressure on the lower back. And, as the pregnant woman's center of gravity changes, she may lean backward to cause even more strain. To help with these changing conditions and consequent pain, mothers-to-be are encouraged to make chiropractors part of their pregnancy support team.

Chiropractic care is a natural way to treat back pain during and after pregnancy. Let us suggest some types of chiropractic care to improve your posture and relieve your back and leg pain. Educate yourself, your friends and family about the benefits of chiropractic care. Dr. Debra Tranberg of SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, offers ongoing presentations on such important topics as "Raising a Healthy Drug-Free Family," "Back Safety in the Workplace," "Stress Reduction," and "Meeting the Health Care Crisis Head-on." To schedule a presentation at your home or office, or to find out the next date and time to attend, please call 545-7388. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we will only accept you as a patient if we feel we can help you.

sewer solutions that are fair and environmentally sound.

But Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said there is the potential to create a chaotic situation. Guild said repealing the Seconded Amended Judgment (article four from the 1997 annual town meeting) would be risky for the town because it is a legally binding agreement between the town and the state.

"Article four is law; you can't do it," Guild said.

And sewering even the majority of the town suitable for sewer pipes could cost $70-$80 million.

CEES is comprised of residents placed into the town's priority districts around Lily Pond, Little Harbor, Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue and Nichols Road to fulfill the terms of the Second Amended Final Judgment for Agreement. CEES members are fighting forced septic system inspections and possible upgrades as part of the agreement creating the septic priority districts. CEES members feel they should be included in the town's sewer system.

Members of CEES have been busy soliciting support for their goals. The group believes the town should stop building sewers in a piece-meal fashion and come up with a solution that addresses wastewater problems in all environmentally sensitive areas, including Lily Pond, Little Harbor and streets surrounding Little Harbor, Cohasset Harbor and all associated feeding waterways.

The group has approached state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth and U.S. Representative William Delahunt for assistance, hired attorneys and engineers, and conducted a massive public education program.

CEES claimed a victory several weeks ago when the Attorney General's Office ruled that the town should sewer 23 homes on Lily Pond and study the feasibility of sewering Little Harbor.

Hedlund met with CEES and town officials last week to see if he could offer any assistance. He said it is possible that there is an alternative state funding source that could lower the price of the North Cohasset project, but more investigation is necessary.

Bumstead said there are so many problems with the sewer commission's plans for North Cohasset that the town should scrap the parts of the project still in the bidding process and start over.

Bumstead said the bids for the sewer project, which recently came back $2.7 million higher than the original $6.6 million estimate, are riddled with inconsistencies and inflated prices. She said CEES has examined the bids and a practice called "pennying." Bidders are required to set prices for a certain number of line items in a contract when bidding on a project. Some of the line-items include items like removing ledge on private property, which is an unpredictable cost. For such line-items, many bidders submit a cost of one penny and then include money in other line items to cover the "pennyed" sections.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said he didn't know why bidders "pennyed" certain items, but that it is common industry practice.

Sewer commissioners said the project bids came back so high because contractors were concerned about liability issues involved with ledge removal while working on private property. Bumstead said Hingham is expecting to lower costs associated with private property by identifying ledge and other difficult spots on private land for contractors, something Cohasset has not done. She said detailed drawings reduce liability by eliminating uncertainties about the amount of ledge on a piece of land, and allowing contractors to avoid "pennying."

But Guild pointed out that there is no guarantee that rebidding a contract will result in lower bids. The bids could come back higher. And Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said at last week's selectmen's meeting that Town Meeting had to reject the additional $2.7 million in funding for the town to legally send the project out to bid again.

Bumstead said "pennying" is just one problem in a long line of shortcomings in the North Cohasset project. She said other towns have embarked on similar sewer projects that cost a fraction of the North Cohasset project. Bumstead said Hingham expects to sewer 150 homes as part of a shared project with Cohasset and Hull for $2.3 million. She added that Hull is going to sewer 130 homes and upgrade its treatment plant for $2.5 million. Bumstead said she has a hard time reconciling those figures with Cohasset's cost of $9.3 million to merely sewer 262 homes.

But Guild replied that those projects may not compare favorably to the North Cohasset area, which has an unusually high amount of ledge.

CEES is also supporting Patrick Plante in his candidacy to defeat Henry Rattenbury for his seat on the sewer commission. Plante visited selectmen last week and pointed out that some of the valves in the bids were priced 300-400 percent higher than identical valves at retail outlets. Bumstead and CEES have also accused the sewer commission's engineering consultant, Tutela Engineering, of overcharging the town for services and performing shoddy work.

Bumstead said the bottom-line is the $2.7 million should be rejected and the town should find a more economical solution that is fair to everyone and beneficial to the environment.

Guild said voters should consider the implications carefully.

"We should continue with the project, pending a state study of the one area currently under consideration as part of the Attorney General's ruling," Guild said. "This has been in the town meeting warrant for 20 years. Right now we're looking at $22 million just for these two small parts of the town (North and central Cohasset) we need a plant and it can be done, but let's get this out of the way, and get the state off our backs. After that, if we want to do more sewer work in the future, then let's do it."

Central bids come in below budget

On Thursday, March 19, sewer commissioners received eight bids for phase one of the Central Cohasset sewer project. Five of the eight bidders came in below the engineer's estimate with the winning bidder over 25 percent below estimate and 10 percent below the next bidder, chairman Ted Guild said.

Ever since the North Cohasset bids came in well above budget, sewer commissioners have stated that they expect the Central Cohasset project to be at or near the projected cost. The phase one bid results appear to substantiate this, commissioners said. Phase one covers the sewer main for the new elementary school down Pleasant Street to Cushing Road to the existing main on Spring Street. Connecting "stubs" to each property line will be installed at the same time, but individual homeowners will not be able to hook up until the town's treatment plant has been expanded, some two years hence, Guild said. The remainder of the Central Cohasset project will go out to bid in the fall.

the total cost of the project to more than $9 million.

If the town meeting article fails, phases 3 & 4 would not go forward and the sewer commission could decide to rebid or drop those phases of the project. If town meeting appropriates the money, the affected homeowners would pay to hookup to the sewer main through betterments assessed over 20 years. The project has qualified for state grant equivalency funding which is highly beneficial to the homeowner, sewer commissioners said.

But some project opponents claim homeowners could do better on their own because the town has to pay prevailing wage and other costs associated with a public project.

"It's the same as paying $500 for a loaf of bread with 25 percent state discount," said Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road. "It's still too much to pay for the bread."

While Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild agreed private contractors can do the job more cheaply, he stressed the favorable state funding still makes having the town contract for the project a better deal for the homeowner.

He said the only reason phases 3 & 4 were proposed was to help out the affected homeowners. State funding provides zero interest loans and forgives part of the pay back, Guild explained. (Bids for Phase 1, which lays sewer pipe throughout the district and phase 2, which hooks up130 homes near Straits Pond — an Area of Critical Environmental Concern — to the sewer have been awarded. Those parts of the project are moving ahead).

To illustrate his point, Guild said the private contractor cost for hooking 45 Windy Hill Road — a typical home in phase 3 — is $8900, according to an independent estimate provided by local contractor Rosano Davis. That's cheaper than the $14,200 "bidder's cost." But assuming the homeowner obtains a home equity loan at 8 percent for 20 years to pay for the hook up privately — the end cost would be $18,700 as opposed to $12,200 for the bidders' cost after state funding.

Hooking up 7 Linden Drive — a typical home in phase 4 — would cost the homeowner $9200 to do privately with a net cost of $20,000 after paying back a home equity loan. The bidder's cost for the same home is $15,900 but only $13,300 after state funding.

Last year the town voted a debt exclusion override to pay the cost of half the North Cohasset project. If article 17 passes Saturday, another override slated for April 4 will ask voters to pick up half or $1.3 million of the cost overrun, if the sewer article passes but the override fails — the affected homeowners would pay for the entire cost as reduced by state funding through betterments. Articles are items of business before town meeting.

In a telephone interview, Guild explained installing pressure systems as part of a sewer project is extremely rare. The high amount of ledge in North Cohasset makes a gravity system — like the one slated for central Cohasset – prohibitively expensive, some three times the cost of the pressure system.

"In order to make North Cohasset possible, the state says the tank and pump are part of the treatment system, therefore the homeowner gets a 50 percent subsidy on what goes on their property," he said. "That's the only reason we proposed to sewer on private property to obtain state funding for them."

In Central Cohasset — where more than 600 homes will be added to the sewer line — all except about 40 of the affected homeowners will pay the entire cost for their own hookups because they are conventional gravity sewers and are less costly. The 40 special cases have a high amount of ledge like those in North Cohasset and will be done by pressure sewers will be afforded the same 50 percent state funding, Guild said.

Moderator hopes to speed up town meeting

If Town Moderator George Marlette has his way then Town Meeting is going to be more streamlined this year.

Marlette said in an effort to expedite the process, for the first time he is going to ask town meeting to approve housekeeping and routine articles as a group.

"I'd like to focus on the issues like sewer and water which are likely to be debated," Marlette said.

The annual Town Meeting — which includes 44 articles or items of business — is slated to begin at 10 a.m. in the high school gymnasium. It takes a quorum of 100 registered voters for town meeting to get underway.

Marlette plans to go through the list of articles with town meeting to ascertain those which no one wants to debate and ask town meeting to adopt them.

Copies of all the motions — or answers to the articles in the warrant — will be available to voters as they check in. Marlette hopes to dispense with the reading of the motions which should also help speed things up.

"I hope people understand what we are trying to accomplish," he said.

Marlette said a similar system is used in Nantucket and Concord.

Nevertheless, Marlette doesn't expect all the business to be completed Saturday. If needed, Town Meeting will reconvene at 7:30 p.m., Monday at the high school.

Well, while they were there they of course went to the Garden of Gethsemane, and spotted a pod on the ground. It was from one of the Ancient Cedars of Lebanon. Well, they brought it home, Ann cultivated it, and this year entered it in the New England Flower Show. Well, guess what folks? It won a blue ribbon! Isn't that grand? And what perfect timing, it being Easter time and all! Isn't that awesome?

ARTISTRY OF FLOWERS

Speaking of flowers, Barbara Power and Patricia Michaud are doing something really special on Tuesday, March 31. Pat develops arrangements as extensions of Judy Rossman's creative ceramic containers. The following Tuesday, April 7, they will be "Creating Art in Bloom at the MFA." They will hold a slide presentation of the Museum of Fine Arts' annual Art in Bloom celebration. Massachusetts Garden Club members interpret the museum's precious art objects to create ravishing floral designs. There will be a fee of $10 for each program, or $15 for the series. Coffee will be served.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

The marina proposal

There was suddenly a lot of pressure in selectmen's chambers Monday to address a "land dispute" between the town and Cohasset Harbor Marina on Parker Avenue.

The lawyer for the marina threatened if the town didn't support owner Paul Trendowicz's request to have the federal anchorage area in Bailey's Creek moved to allow expansion of the marina then the town dredging project might be jeopardized.

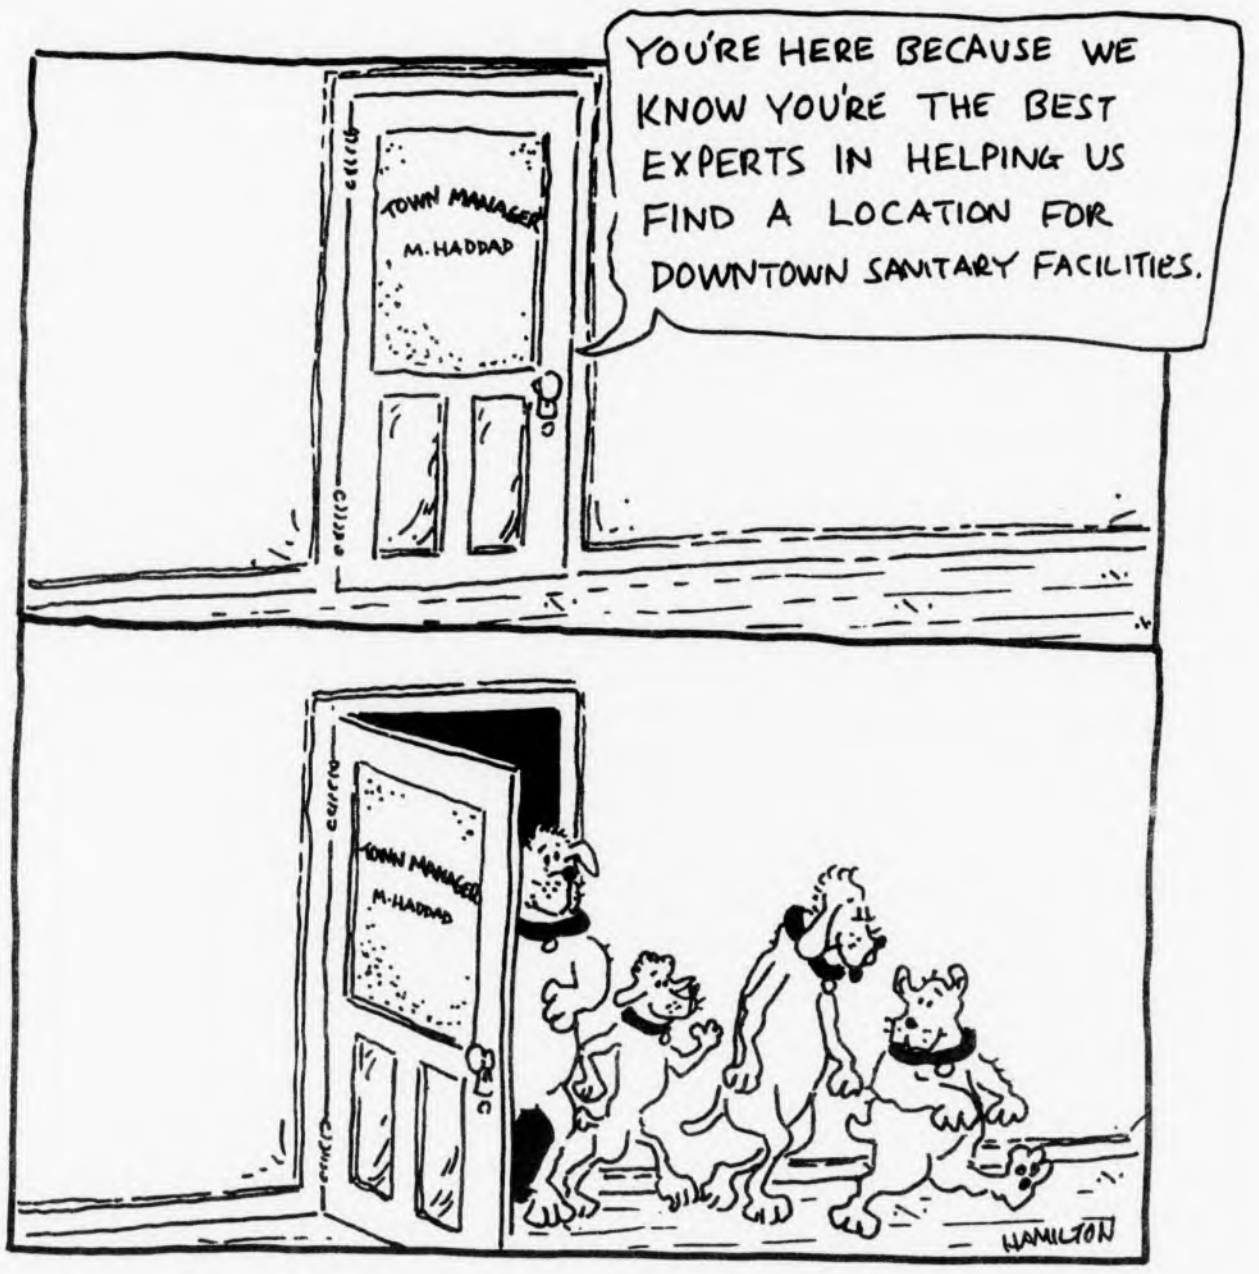
Mr. Trendowicz, who claims he owns to the middle of the creek, is willing to deed that land to the town if Cohasset will support moving the federal line of jurisdiction 40 feet to accommodate plans to expand the marina.

This was all happening too fast for Selectman Diane Sullivan, who — as liasion to the harbor committee — wasn't told about a meeting held last week where town counsel and Trendowicz's lawyer met for 4-1/2 hours to discuss the issue.

She was outraged that the harbor committee was also out of the loop and questioned Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan why Mr. Trendowicz and his attorney were a last-minute addition to Monday's agenda.

The dredging project has been four years in the planning stages.

While we can understand why Mr. Trendowicz wants to expand into the creek because the state will not allow him to expand "landward" on the other side of his docks for environmental reasons — we don't see the harm in his waiting to deal with the town after the dredging project is completed next spring.



His lawyer kept talking about urgency. But any urgency is on the town's side to make sure this project meets all extremely tight permitting timetables so the dredging starts on schedule.

Cohasset has too much riding on this dredging project to get the Army Corps of Engineers involved in deauthorizing and reauthorizing federal anchorage areas at this late stage.

While a land swap might be worth studying — it should be done without the pressure of trying to piggyback onto Cohasset's dredging project.

And clearly, with a proposal of this magnitude — Mrs. Sullivan and the harbor committee on which she serves as liasion — should be involved from the outset.

James Lane/Eleazer Lane closure

To the Editor:

James Lane—formerly Eleazer Lane prior to 1925—is and always has been considered a dead end lane. It has never been a "through way" to Pleasant Street for countless reasons, primarily public safety, and rightly so. James Lane is approximately 125 yards long and so narrow in spots—less than the width of two cars side-by-side in some areas—that it can only comfortably accommodate one car traveling in one direction at any given time.

James Lane is a quaint, quiet, peaceful lane directly serving seven homes whose driveways connect to the lane, and indirectly serving another four homes whose backyards abut the lane. There are approximately 14 children and 15 adults who use the lane on a regular basis.

In the interest of public safety and for the good of all the residents on James Lane, please help your fellow neighbors and vote with us at town meeting March 28 on Article 42 to keep James Lane/Eleazer Lane a dead end and discontinue the Eleazer Lane parcel as a private way. This is really only a formality because James Lane/Eleazer Lane has always been considered and treated as a dead end anyway.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectmen candidates:
As chief executive officers of the town, do selectmen have a role in the school budget process?

SELECTMAN/Martha Gjesteby

The school board has full authority to prepare the school budget. This proposal must then be presented to the town manager, who has the final authority in preparing the budget that will be presented to Town meeting. The board of selectmen and the Advisory board can recommend changes in the budgets that are to be presented to Town meeting. In the "town" part of the budget they can recommend line item changes, but in the "school" part they can only concern themselves with the bottom line. Nobody, including the Town meeting can tell the school committee how to spend their budget..

The role of the selectmen in this process is therefore limited. They can recommend to the town manager as well as to the school committee as well as the town meeting to either increase or decrease the bottom line of school budget. If they feel that the town can afford to spend a larger share of the town's income, they can recommend an increase in the bottom line but the school committee has the sole authority to determine how the increases should be spent. Likewise, if they feel the school committee's request is more than they can afford, they can make recommendations to reduce the bottom line. Here again they will have no input as to where the reductions should be made.

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

Yes. While there is a separation of responsibility in making budgets, the boards are not equals in their respective budgetary scopes. The school department is still one department within the larger whole of the town. The town manager and selectmen are tasked with formulating the overall town budget. Thus, they have and should set a "bottom line" target for school spending as part of the overall town budget, and they can do this without intruding into the educational policy mission of the school committee.

The rub comes when the "bottom lines" do not match. Discussion of individual expenditures will be a natural and unavoidable result of incongruous budgets. Because of their wider mandate, questions by the selectmen are a necessary function of their job. However, the selectmen can only comment on individual expenditures, and it remains the school committee's job to decide upon individual spending choices. The school committee, though, must be sensitive to the overall town budget, and appreciate that its budget has to fit within a financially palatable whole.

Last week, Mr. Kidder wrote about teamwork. His words should be heeded. Since these boards control all our money, they have to work together rather than with a separate camp mentality. That is why I advocated a couple of weeks ago regular interaction between the boards. The school budget can be handled without jurisdictional noses getting out of joint if there was less jurisdictional sensitivity and better understanding by both boards of the other's problems and needs.

SELECTMAN/Merle S. Brown

Before the Town Manager's Act, the selectmen were responsible for the budget process of the following: fire, police, DPW, town accountant, building inspector and the town hall secretarial staff. All these and other department budgets were then brought to the advisory board. After review, the advisory board would bring the overall budget to the annual town meeting.

Under the Town Manager's Act, the town manager is responsible for the overall budget of the town. He presents the budget to the selectmen and the advisory board for their review before it is presented to the annual town meeting. Therefore, the ultimate role of the selectmen is to recommend the bottom line of the school budget. I don't believe the selectmen should, or do, have the right to tell the school committee what they can do within their budget. However, because the selectmen are responsible for the bottom line, they should work with the school committee for a better understanding of how the bottom line of the budget was achieved. I also believe the school committee should make the budget easier to understand for all interested parties. For clarity and audit purposes, documentation should be recorded when money is transferred from one account to another. This is a recommendation that resulted from the recent audit of the school department.

Sewer commission:
Bids for North Cohasset were 45 percent higher than expected. What can the sewer commission do to make sure history doesn't repeat itself when Central Cohasset goes out to bid?

SEWER COMMISSION/ Henry Rattenbury

Of course, the high bid prices for the North Cohasset project have been a major concern for the sewer commissioners. We have stated repeatedly, however, that we do not expect a large overage on the Central Cohasset project because there will be very little blasting on private property. In fact, we now have concrete proof that the Central Cohasset costs will be in line with our engineers' projections.

On March 19 the sewer commissioners received bids from eight contractors for the sewer main to connect the new elementary school with the town's treatment plant. The contract covers the sewer main down Pleasant Street to Cushing Road to Spring Street, including the connecting "stubs" to each homeowner's property line. The winning bid was 25 percent less than the projected cost, and five of the eight bidders came in below estimate.

We continue to expect that the Central Cohasset project will come in at or very close to budget. We shall continue our efforts to ensure a similarly large number of bidders when the remainder of the Central Cohasset project goes out to bid in the fall.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Patrick A. Plante

There is not one simple answer to your question of the week regarding what to do to make sure history doesn't repeat itself when Central Cohasset goes out to bid.

The North Cohasset project was divided into four separate contracts. This manner of bidding quadruples the efforts of contractors figuring the job.

Two years ago, when the North Cohasset section was in its initial stage of bidding, I suggested to the Sewer Commissioners that this should be designed just like every other sewer project in the country. The municipality asks for an appropriation from the taxpayers for the main sewer line, and each homeowner is then responsible for the payment of his own hook-up.

Had we done this, the cost to the town of Cohasset would be less than $4 million dollars instead of the almost $9 million dollar figure we are now facing.

My suggestions to avoid this from happening in Central/Hillside are, as follows: (a) If the contract is divided into four sections, also ask for bids to be submitted for the entire project. (b) Combine town-wide bids for North Cohasset/Central/Hillside to attract larger, more experienced contractors to do the entire project. (c) The Sewer Commissioners should reject immediately all bids with a 45 percent increase over the appropriated amount of money.

I was somewhat surprised when I asked one of the sewer commissioners last week why he did not see a "red flag" when he looked at the bids, and he admitted to me that even though three months had passed since the bid opening, he has not even seen the bids!

All of us must be vigilant and work together to be more fiscally responsible to all the taxpayers in the town of Cohasset.

School committee:
Separation of powers. Do you think selectmen are overstepping their bounds by trying to micromanage the school budget?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

I am not convinced that the board of selectmen have been attempting to micromanage the school budget. I think most, if not all, of the selectmen understand under Massachusetts law it is the function of the school committee to determine how funds in the school budget are to be spent. However, because the money in the school budget is supplied by the town, I believe selectmen are clearly entitled to ask well thought out questions concerning the availability of funds in the current budget before agreeing the recommended additional funding of the school budget.

It is, however, important that anyone who would like to question the school committee about the budget first take the time to review and understand the budget. A lot of time has been spent recently debating the appropriateness of the current format of the school budget. In order to eliminate this debate in the future, the school committee and the town manager should meet as soon as possible for the purpose of reaching an agreement concerning the format for next year's budget.

Clearly, everyone cannot agree on each line item that is contained in an $8 million budget. It is, however, important that everyone has the opportunity to clearly understand how the money is being spent and the rationale for the school committee's spending priorities. Perhaps with an agreed upon format for next year's budget, the allegations that money is somehow being "hidden" in the budget can come to an end.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

It is my belief that the original purpose and intent of the selectmen's school budget review was a beneficial one; to maintain communication between the two bodies. However, I do feel that the role of the selectmen and ht process of review did, in fact, get misconstrued and misinterpreted. This seems apparent by the tone of some of the budget review questions asked and most certainly clear by the decision to fund the school committee an amount less than was recommended. I must say, it does seem inappropriate for any one board to pretend to know what is best for another board's charge and then establish funding priorities without the benefit of months of fiscal planning and review.

It will be unfortunate if we allow the spirit of cooperation between the two groups to be damaged as a result of this recent controversy. If I am elected, it will be my intention to encourage continued cooperation and communication between both groups. As public servants, I feel we may just need to remind ourselves that it is okay to question one another and sometimes disagree as long as we do so within the appropriate process and with respect for one another. We should, after all, have similar goals; to provide Cohasset residents with our best possible public service.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Hugh Morgan

I do not believe that the selectmen have tried to micromanage the school budget. As elected representatives of the taxpayers, they are obliged to represent the entire town and they have tried to avoid a Proposition 2 1/2 override vote for the Fiscal Year 1999. Accordingly, they worked with the town manager to establish reasonable spending objectives. When it became apparent that the schools needed more than 5.5 percent to 6 percent objective, they voted four to one to approve a 7.7 percent school budget. The democratic process worked.

Legally, the school committee controls school spending priorities and I fully support maintaining that accountability. I welcome the selectmen, other officials and the taxpayers making constructive suggestions. The school committee should control its own budget and work with the town manager, selectmen and advisory committee to integrate it into town-wide priorities. I'm sensitive to the reality that there are more demands for the taxpayers' resources than can be fully accommodated. In particular, many elderly have legitimate concerns about tax increases exceeding their fixed incomes.

We must accept the fact that high quality education comes with a cost. Taxpayers realize that it's expensive to offer our youth the best possible education. If elected to the school committee, I will work to support a top quality education program that will be managed cost effectively.

Health board:
What is the biggest challenge facing the health board in its dealings with Cohasset Heights Landfill?

HEALTH BOARD/Steve Bobo

CHL is a powerful business interest which may jeopardize our way of life here in town by threatening our water supply. The Army Corps of Engineers reports indicate the approaching encroachment of high levels of mercury form CHL outflow toward our water supply. CHL has dumped far more fill materials into their landfill than approved by the state. CHL have used the tools of publicity and expensive litigation to further their profitable enterprise, and will continue if unopposed. Nevertheless, as a member of the board of health, I must disregard my personal feelings and follow laws and regulations in place.

Accordingly, the two major challenges that I perceive are as follows:

1. The promotion of continued vigilance to keep the issue of the CHL before the public, and let citizens know the truth about the threat CHL poses.

2. Support for new measures, and innovative and efficient prosecution of existing laws requiring shutdown of the landfill.

As a member of the board of health, I will do everything in my power to support new legislation and enforce the laws in place which will lead to closing CHL and diminishing its effect on our ecology.

Cohasset PSO provides mid-year update

By Jane Pescatore
PSO PRESIDENT

It's hard to believe that half the year has already passed! The PSO has again been very active in supporting the schools. So far, we have committed more than $10,000 to grant and enrichment programs at all three schools. Your fantastic support of our fund-raising efforts has ensured that we have funds available to provide additional enrichment programs, instructional materials, and other capitol items that the current school budgets just can't accommodate.

Rather than chronicle the achievements of the past five months, however, I'd like to take this opportunity to talk about the challenges and opportunities for the future.

The challenges facing us are myriad.

* There is escalating competition for town funds because of major infrastructure projects that must be undertaken. Indeed, two of the biggest infrastructure projects are the older schools themselves, Deer Hill and the middle/high school.

* Cohasset, like other towns in the Commonwealth, is wrestling with the integration of state-mandated curriculum frameworks to prepare students for mandatory testing.

* While we are dealing with all of these issues, we are also in the process of finding a new "leader" who can chart a course for the future. Our new superintendent needs to ensure we have a school system that is stronger educationally, financially and socially.

* In the spring, we will be filling two school committee seats vacated by experienced members.

* New concepts in education — the middle school and block scheduling — have been recently introduced and require ongoing evaluation and refinement.

* The PSO, the school councils, and the schools themselves have been working closely with community and local law enforcement officials on drug and alcohol issues that threaten our children.

The direction we take in the future is in your hands. To meet these challenges we, as parents, need to make sure our voices are heard, our concerns registered, our suggestions integrated. The PSO is your organization. Please, get to know your PSO representatives — there are 28 of them, all listed in the school calendar. Use them to channel your thoughts and concerns. Better yet, join us! PSO Board, School Council and School Committee meetings are all open to everyone. Come to the meetings, tell us what we can do to help you become more effective advocates for education. Public education is only as strong as the parents who participate in it!

Cohasset needs an affordable second water tank

By Rob Kasameyer, John McNabb, Richard Muncey, Board of Water Commissioners
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last year, Town Meeting voted unanimously to site the needed second water tank on Bear Hill, next to the existing tank for reasons of public safety, health, cost, and timing. Nevertheless, construction has been delayed so that alternative siting on Scituate Hill could be fully explored, consistent with the wishes of the Zoning Board of Appeals and certain Town residents. It is not time to move ahead.

A second tank is essential to ensure sufficient fire reserve and improve water quality. The added fire reserve is needed to meet insurance industry recommendations to protect property values. At the same time, many of us in Cohasset are plagued with dirty or stained water from the solid matter that naturally builds up in the pipes and which must be removed periodically by flushing.

Without the second tank, it is impossible to conduct an effective large scale flushing program to maintain water quality. In addition to the lack of adequate fire protection from insufficient fire reserve at times of high demand, this lack of adequate water quality compels the town to build a second tank as soon as possible.

There are two potential sites — Bear Hill and Scituate Hill. Both are suitable from the standpoint of providing fire protection which meets insurance recommendations. The Bear Hill site has the advantage of being owned by the town, which has used the land for water supply purposes since 18~7. This gives the Bear Hill site inherent timing and cost advantages, as well as benefiting from a redundant dual water main connection with the distribution system. The Scituate Hill locale, the former Norfolk Conveyor site, is owned by a private party, who is now working on a development proposal that could accommodate a water storage tank.

The Water Commission has also investigated two important valuation issues regarding the Bear Hill and Scituate Hill locations — the impact of a second tank on Bear Hill to property value there and the potential for a significant financial penalty for the Town if it takes the appropriate land on Scituate Hill by eminent domain.

We hired an appraiser familiar with Cohasset and recommended by the Town for this study. As part of his report, appraiser Tom Mulhern, who examined assessors records and land sale rewards and interviewed area real estate agents. His report concluded that the addition of a second tank at Bear Hill will not adversely affect property values there. He also concluded that, as long as the Scituate Hill site stays zoned industrial, that there would be no significant potential liability for the Town above the costs of a normal land-taking on Scituate Hill, if eminent domain is the chosen route.

Last fall, the water Commissioners asked Wayne Sawchuk and Glenn Pratt, two strong proponents of the Scituate Hill site, to help develop a strategy to make it possible for the town to site the tank on Scituate Hill with no additional cost or timing penalty to the town. We agreed that such an arrangement would make Scituate Hill the preferred site. This has resulted in on-going discussions between the Water Commission and a Scituate Hill Development group about siting a tank on Scituate Hill.

Several sites have been considered on Scituate Hill. As it stands today, all are more costly than Bear Hill for the town. Including land acquisition and construction, the incremental costs range from 10 percent to 35 percent above Bear Hill, when calculated on a comparable basis. This corresponds to $140,000 to almost $500,000 more than the estimated cost of putting the tank on Bear Hill of $1,400,000.

These are very significant numbers. The Town previously voted unanimously to put the tank on Bear Hill based on a then estimated cost difference of a little over $200,000 between the Bear Hill and Scituate Hill sites. The Commission does not favor paying a substantial premium for locating the second tank on Scituate Hill. That substantial extra cost for Scituate Hill could be better spent on the many, many other water supply rehabilitation needs throughout the Town.

Cohasset should avoid the situation faced by the town of Pembroke. That town was delayed for three years in constructing their needed second tank, which when finally approved, they experienced significantly higher costs for construction because of the delay.

It has been clear that. if we are successful in getting the Scituate Hill site for the town with no cost penalty, the Commission will recommend the Scituate Hill site at Town Meeting. If there is no satisfactory resolution regarding Scituate hill on the basis of cost nor timing, we will recommend that Town Meeting adopt the zoning bylaw change that will allow U8 to put the second tank on Bear Hill.

FROM THE D&A COMMITTEE

Kids and drugs: What to do with your worry

Everyone knows there is a problem in this world with drug abuse. But it gets very difficult to wonder and explore if this drug use is happening with our own children. Sometimes this difficulty keeps us from looking at our kids hard enough, from sharing our worries with them, from setting the kind of limits that might quell our fears.

"But I've always trusted her," we wail. "I could never search her room. I don't want to jeopardize that trust."

"If I act suspicious, he'll get even more secretive!" we say defensively.

"I know my child knows right from wrong," we respond with certainty.

"If there were a problem, she would come to me. All kids act secretive sometimes," we say wishfully.

"I can't talk to my son about smoking pot. What if he asks if I've ever smoked? If I don't bring it up, I won't have to lie," we shrug defensively.

Maybe. Maybe not.

Wondering if kids are on drugs is tough, but it is also a loving thing to do. So what should you do?

First of all, honor your own worry and suspicions. They are not bad. They are what make you a good parent. Think about it as the same kind of worry you might have if your child has a suspicious looking sports injury, a prolonged stomach bug, a cut that isn't healing. You would plan a way to check it out and make sure your child was in good health. Sometimes good health requires unpleasant things like foul tasting medicine for 10 days, or stitches. But you do it for their well being. So, too, must you be willing to search a backpack, to ask for explanations about where baby-sitting, birthday, or allowance money is going, to carefully check any liquor bottles you keep at home, and perhaps hardest of all, to sort out your own experiences and come to terms with the fact that you, too, may have subjected yourself to serious risk by drug use in your youth. Many drug users of the 60's and 70's haven't lived to tell their stories. You are here, and if you used drugs in your youth, you need to figure out a way to use your experience in the task of guiding and protecting your children.

Second, talk. Start a conversation about substance abuse, and keep that conversation going.

If there are two parents in the home, talk to each other and come up with an agreed upon approach to the issue of drugs and alcohol. If parents live separately, but are both involved in parenting, try to get together and form some consistent expectations. When the parents have as much agreement as they can get, talk to your child. Conversations that are open ended, with no preconceived ideas, flow better. Try very hard to listen, and stay receptive, even if you think what you are being told is bunk. See if you can come to some common understanding of how things are, just to set the stage for future conversations about your child's specific behavior. Then, together, decide what your child can expect. Don't say anything mean. Discuss what each of you think would happen if there were underage drinking in your home. If there were drugs found in the home? If your child brought home a drunk friend? Called for a ride from a party because there were no sober drivers? Was picked up by the police for being with a crowd that was rowdy and drinking? (Of course you must be prepared to be looked at as if you have six heads. "Where do parents get these strange ideas?" One of the joys of parenthood, especially through adolescence, is that we are supposed to be geeks, we are supposed to act as if something as unlikely as drug use in our community is going on. If we never seem strange to our children, they will be deprived of an important developmental phase.)

Behavioral changes are the norm in adolescence. Your sweet daughter may become a stranger from one day to the next; your lively son may become monosyllabic and reclusive, overnight. Changes in habits, friends, activities, and disposition are worrisome, and can be a sign of drug use, but it's hard to tell.

As you talk with your child, try to connect around the issue of your worry. As parents, we have the right to have feelings, and to be spared of chronic unrelenting worry. (One parent never gave her 17-year-old daughter a curfew, but asked her, "What time should I start to worry about you if you're not home yet?" Together they came up with a reasonable time, and she managed to get home before it. Honoring your worries and engaging in conversations are parental acts of love in the guidance and protection of children. (Next month: The Courage to Lovingly Confront)

The physicians will address such points as: How many people in the U.S. are affected by allergies, asthma? At what age does asthma usually appear? Can it appear later? Is it curable? Does it diminish with age? Is it hereditary? What are the latest treatments, medications? What are common allergies? Common food allergies? At what age do allergies appear? Disappear? Are they Hereditary? New treatments? Asthma and allergy in children, how to handle?

Correction:

The last line of Pat Martin's response to the Question of the Week on the Open Meeting Law which appeared in the March19 issue of the Cohasset Mariner should have said:

"This practice, if not already in place, would allow for a quick consultation and answer should the question of a meeting violation arise."

Due to a typesetting error, the word violation was inadvertently omitted from Mrs. Martin's answer.

Also the time for a coffee for Pat Martin, who is a candidate for school committee, should have said 9:30 a.m. not 7:30 p.m. on March 25.

The Mariner regrets these errors and any confusion they may have caused.

Selectman Diane Sullivan objects to secret meeting

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Tempers flared Monday when Selectman Diane Sullivan protested the process behind the Cohasset Harbor Marina expansion proposal. (See related story).

The proposed expansion of the private marina off Parker Avenue could impact the town's $1.34 million dredging project due to start in September. The project is seen as critical for safe navigation for recreational boaters and commercial fishermen.

In the strongest possible terms, Sullivan objected to the fact that a critical board and town officials were not in the loop when the lawyer for the marina owner was permitted to meet with town counsel last week — a meeting which cost the town $450.

Diane Sullivan, who is liaison to the harbor committee, was also not told about the meeting before the fact.

Also Paul Trendowicz, owner of the marina, and his lawyer Donald Connors were a last minute addition the selectmen's meeting agenda Monday but apparently the harbormaster and harbor committee were not told to appear, she said.

But Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he asked Haddad to deal with the issue because he felt it was time to bring the matter out in the open. The land dispute between the town and marina has been "simmering behind the scenes," he said. Trendowicz claims that he, not the town, owns midway into Bailey's Creek and that he could have the federal anchorage removed if the town doesn't support realignment of the federal lines of jurisdiction there so he can expand his marina. Sullivan said Haddad and the harbormaster met with Trendowicz and made a determination to refer the matter to town counsel.

"Let's bring it out in the table. Let's discuss it and move forward in the best interests of the town," he said.

But Diane Sullivan would have none of it.

"We have a harbor committee and a harbormaster. Why isn't their opinion or input here? This was not an agenda item, how come?" she asked.

She said she resented having the proponents in without selectmen having benefit of legal counsel.

Selectmen voted 4-1, with Diane Sullivan dissenting, to spend $2,500 to have town counsel work with Haddad, the harbor committee, and harbormaster to see if they can resolve the matter and report back to the board with their recommendations.

Marina land dispute could threaten harbor dredging

"Cohasset Marina wants to see the dredging go forward." Trendowicz's attorney Donald Connors of Duxbury told selectmen Monday. "But the project is at risk if the controversy can't be resolved. The marina doesn't want controversy."

But former selectman Peter Pratt who has worked on the project for four years — which involves 22 local, federal and state agencies — said opening up this land dispute with the town now is a bad idea.

"We are in compliance," he said. "The federal government says Paul Trendowicz is intruding and must move. If he disagrees with that, he has a problem with the U.S. government."

Pratt, who worries this has the potential to bring the entire dredging project to a screeching halt, does not rule out Trendowicz being able to work out something with the town down the road.

"Anything is possible here," he said. "But this close to the project, it's inconceivable to seek another authorization."

But Trendowicz may have no choice but to play hard ball with the town if he wants to expand the marina. His proposal to the town follows on the heels of the state Department of Environmental Protection's rejection of a permit to allow him to dredge the inter-tidal zone on the "landward" side of the marina, Connors said.

In a presentation to selectmen, Connors said coastal laws which date back to Colonial times gave landowners ownership into waterways to facilitate the construction of docks. He said although the town obtained indemnification for dredging in Bailey's Creek 30 years ago, it never took the creek bottom by eminent domain.

John Bertolami, chairman of the Harbor Committee, said if there's a problem with dredging the marina then Bailey's Creek won't be dredged which amounts to about 20 percent of the total project.

"I think that's a major thing," he said.

Pratt said not dredging Bailey's Creek would be tantamount to the town turning back $1/4 million in federal money.

Trendowicz claims the town supported the realigning the federal anchorage area in the harbor to allow the Cohasset Yacht Club to expand.

But Pratt said the two situations were different.

He said the yacht club did not intrude on the navigation channel and by reconfiguring its docks both the yacht club and town picked up mooring space.

"It was a win-win situation," Pratt said.

He explained that a 40-foot expansion of Cohasset Marina would wipe out space for some new town moorings and impact on the navigation channel through Bailey's Creek.

"We'd be losing 40 feet of navigational space. In low water, things would be very tight. Why wipe out public property?" he asked.

Trendowicz's lawyer said Cohasset would ultimately benefit because the private marina would provide more slips for boaters.

Connors said the Army Corps will pencil in the changes once the town, marina and DEP reach an agreement.

In a letter from the ACE to Trendowicz, Duban Montoya, project manager, said the town and DEP would have to seek action from Congress to exclude the 40 foot expansion of the marina from the project although final action is not necessary prior to the dredging project moving ahead.

Paul Pattison of Elm Street said any land transfer should go before town meeting. He questioned why something of this magnitude is being raised at the last minute.

"There's something sinister about it," he said.

Laxmen hope to build on tourney experience

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Coming off a highly successful year in which they ventured into the state tourney, the Cohasset High boys' lacrosse team is once again ready to kick off their season.

Coached by newcomer Mike Falvey, the Skippers are a team of interesting makeup. After graduating nine talented seniors last year, including seven starters, the team could be expected to drop off. But, only two weeks into practice, things look good for the boys in blue.

Led by seven seniors, the remainder of the 25-man roster is an interesting blend of rookies, with a few holdovers from last year's squad.

Coach Falvey pointed to the veteran attack unit of senior Jamie Buick, senior Eric Moore and junior Ted Goff as a key.

"Buick was the leading scorer in the state last year, and is probably a preseason All-American. This is a returning unit; these guys have played together and should be big for us."

Other seniors include Derek Bugley, Bourke Corcoran, Adam Donovan, Janson Dupre, John Kasameyer, captain Pat Leahy and Tom Leahy. Most saw a fair amount of action on last year's squad.

They are complemented by a small but skilled group of juniors. Jamie DeMichele, Goff, Justin Maitland, Jake Motley and Adam Sasso will all be integral parts of the team this season. Goff is the only one who played varsity last year, as Motley was sidelined with a back injury and the others did not play.

Sophomores Kevin DeVito, Bill Good, Travis Moore, Matt Pilczak and Brad Powell could challenge for starting positions this year. DeVito started a few games in net at the end of last season and appears to have a lock on the goalie position for the next three years.

Falvey also has a number of freshmen on his roster, for seasoning as well as backup. Ronan Buick, John Cotter, Lane Forrer, Justin Langham and Ken Portanova will all don varsity uniforms to play for the Skippers.

"I expect a good season this year, with plenty of wins. We compete in a tough, tough league and I've increased the difficulty of our out-of-league games."

COACH MIKE FALVEY

Falvey seemed very enthusiastic about his team's performance this year. He coached lacrosse in Hingham for nine years, but he has never been the head coach of a varsity lacrosse team before.

"I expect a good season this year, with plenty of wins. We compete in a tough, tough league and I've increased the difficulty of our out-of-league games. If we play as a team, we should do very well."

With Buick, who scored a ridiculous hundred points last year, threatening to repeat his monster season, a solid force of veterans melding with a skilled group of newcomers, and an energetic new coach, things look promising for the lacrosse squad this year.

Scenic beauty draws runners to Cohasset race

10K Roadrace-By-The-Sea is April 5

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The 10K (6.2 miles) course has everything a runner could possibly want if he or she was to design a typical New England route. There are winding, tree-shaded roads, a spectacular view of the ocean, large mansions and a starting area straight out of a Norman Rockwell painting.

When the field gathers behind the starting line, April 5, at Cohasset Common on North Main Street for the 22nd Annual Cohasset Roadrace-By-The-Sea at 1 p.m., however, the big question mark, as it is every year, will be the weather.

And why shouldn't it be. Mother Nature is the big variable every year in what has become the unofficial start of spring in Cohasset.

"One year we had hail, snow, sleet and rain," said race director Roy Fitzsimmons. "And the sun came out that day too. It's typical New England weather so it's just a roll of the dice."

Lousy weather conditions have kept a small amount of thin-skinned runners from entering on race day in past years. By contrast, in other years more than half of the runners have waited until the morning of the race to enter. Size of the field aside, the Cohasset run is one of the most popular on the South Shore, second only to Hingham's Fourth of July event as far as numbers of runners.

But even Hingham's course can't match Cohasset's when it comes to overall beauty. The race has been recognized by New England Runner and Running magazines as being one of the most scenic in the country.

This year's race should have another large turnout. And, if conditions are right, post registration could be huge, enough to rival the record 1,200-runner field of 1996.

As of March 24, 340 runners had registered for the race, a number Fitzsimmons said is "about what we usually do" just under two weeks before the event. What he found especially encouraging was that 46 percent of the applications were from women runners. Fitzsimmons said the number of female runners has increased steadily over the past several years, a trend he would like to see continue.

"There are definitely more women running the race every year," Fitzsimmons said. "It's great to see so many female runners out there."

Though the course is as breathtaking as one can find, it is hardly an easy run. It's no coincidence that the course record of three-time winner Bob Hodge still stands at 30:31

Runners can get into their pace early, thanks to the flat first two miles. The route, however, turns difficult just past Sandy Beach when the competitors hit the rolling hills of Jerusalem Road, by far the most scenic section of the course.

Runners face the most challenging hill on the course when they take the left from Jerusalem Road onto Forest Ave. The incline is relatively short, but what it lacks in

Sailing club looking for one good boat

As the sailing season approaches, the Cohasset Sailing Club is looking to adopt a boat for use with their junior sailor training program this summer.

At present the organization has two boats for their youth sailing program and they are looking to a add a third to spread the work out more evenly among the vessels as well as to better serve the students. Budget constraints restrict the outright purchase of a launch this year, so they are turning to the community for help.

"It's not a situation where we are going to shut down the program if we don't get another boat, but another one on hand would be a great deal of help," said CSC representative Kevin O'Connor. "We've got more kids than ever interested in the program."

Specifications for the boat are that it be a 13- to 17-foot Whaler or similar craft with a 20- to 25-horsepower engine. If this description fits something sitting unused at the end of your driveway, the Cohasset Sailing Club wants to talk with you.

CSC's Junior Training Program has experienced a resurgence over the past few years with an increase in the number of participants and retention of a higher number of these sailors to the ages of 15- and 16-years-old.

"Chuck Peterson and his staff have been doing a great job with the program and keeping things interesting for the kids," explained O'Connor.

In addition to the number of participants, more sailors from the junior program are participating in regattas away from Cohasset Harbor. Another staff member will likely be added this year as well because of the growth of the program.

Preparations are already underway for the 1998 season at the Cohasset Sailing Club. Docks will be going into the water in early May and the sailing program is scheduled to begin the week of June 22. The board of directors has reviewed and approved facility and equipment upgrades and repairs for the upcoming season.

The CSC is a non-profit organization and can offer the combined benefit of a tax deduction and the satisfaction that you would be helping out a summer program. For more information please call Chuck Peterson ((383-6194), Kevin O'Connor (383-1290) or Peter Pescatore (383-2660).

ngth it more than makes up for in its degree of steepness.

Once over the hill, the runners have a rolling stretch along Forest Ave., which has become better known as "Rollercoaster Road." The course mercifully flattens out on North Main St. to the finish line in front of town hall.

Despite the toughness of the course, post-race conversation centers more on what can be a stubborn wind, than the hills or overall weather conditions. "The runners complain mostly about the wind," Fitzsimmons said. "The cold doesn't bother them."

As has been the norm, there will be no shortage of awards presented to runners following the race. Age groups for both men and women include Under 14, 14-18, 19-39, 40-49, 50-59 and a 60-and-over class.

THE FISH STORY

BY MARK TRASK

Learning from one of the best about the art of fishing

Deep in frosty January, the front door rattled and banged open and there behind his mischievous goatee stood Roger, grinning, with a package of aqua books tucked under one arm. They're here Mark, he exclaimed and the pocket knife flashed and a dozen spilled across the counter. As I looked up at Roger's smiling face, his eyes ever-twinkling behind oversized glasses and shaded by the ever-present ballcap, I began to realize what this moment was.

Roger began fishing before many of us were born. He would snort at that I am sure. Rowing a dory in the inland waters of Ocean City, N.J. and learning to swim, he reveals, were his father's prerequisites for moving up to a two-horsepower Sears & Roebucks gasoline outboard. He spent his teen years chasing every fish within reach before heading off into the Navy and college. Something we will all benefit from. Settling in on the shores of prolific Cape Cod Bay, Roger began a career in teaching in the Duxbury schools and learning on the waters of the bay. Something we will all benefit from.

Years and years of chasing the various species of the bay, learning their habits, learning their seasons, learning their menu, chartering thousands of anglers, running a bait and tackle shop, lobbying for protective legislation, teaching at seminars, where does it end. Someday it will end, but as I thumbed through the fresh copy of "Bottom Dunkers Bible" I realized that the moment had arrived. All those years of fishing, chasing bait, detangling snarled reels, poring over charts and later electronics, seasick customers, great trips and not so great trips, were contained in the bible!

Feeling not unlike Indiana Jones, about to discover secret wonders of the world, I dug in, reading the "Bottom Dunkers Bible" in the space of a couple hours. With generous dollops of the humor those who know Roger have come to expect, he plunges right in describing all the bottom fish of the bay, from the goosefish, described by Roger as...."in my opinion...the ugliest of all marine life"...to the tautog.... "if its colors weren't so subdued this guy would be a technicolor nightmare"...to mixing in some delectable recipes. My mouth was watering as I chuckled over Roger's tongue-in-cheek handling of the various niceties of fish and fishing and a lifetime spent in the pursuit thereof...

From there he branches out into selecting your gear, out-fitting a boat, selecting tackle, electronics, terminal tackle, rods, reels, line, rigs and knots, where he highly recommends adhering to the K.I.S.S. principle. Liberally sprinkled with great photographs of fine fish captured over the years, "Part 2" picks up after a very informative section on the care and handling of your catch, again more blue ribbon recipes.

"Part 2" is a much more in-depth look at each species, their habits, preferred baits and lures, and techniques for bringing them in. Roger reveals what may be his biggest secret of all. He keeps meticulous records of each trip, chart positions, loran coordinates, date, time and tide are all recorded. As the bible reaches its conclusion, Roger talks about record-sized fish and provides an excellent index for those who will use the bible as a handy reference.

Yes that moment had come, when the man many would describe as a guru was parting with decades worth of hard-won information and experiences. This is something we will all benefit from. What is something like that truly worth?

In bookstores and bait shops from Boston to the canal and beyond, a tidy $15 is money well spent in pursuit of a sport that can easily cost you thousands. For those who would seek to meet Roger Jarvis in person, he will be at Bayside Marine in Duxbury, April 18, from 10 a.m. to noon and April 19 from 1 to 3 p.m.

Dust off those rods. Clean up those reels. Wind on some fresh line. The Mass. Division of Fisheries and Wildlife reports that stocking is under way on the cape and ponds in Plymouth. Locally the Tack Factory Pond and Brushy Hill Reservoir in Scituate (First Herring Brook) have had their first batch stocked. Fisherman Jack was there and had two beautiful trout for his efforts, as well as the first "story" of the one that snapped his line and got away!

The 10K Cohasset walk for MS

Residents of Cohasset and surrounding towns are invited to join The Cohasset MS Walk on Saturday, April 18. The event, which will start and end at the Cohasset Town Hall, has a scenic 10K route through Cohasset.

Check-in will begin at 8:30 a.m., the walk will start at 10 a.m. and by 1 p.m. the majority of the walkers will have returned to the Town Hall for a Welcome Back Lunch.

The MS Society is extending an invitation to people from across the area to join with family members, friends, civic and fraternal clubs, church groups and corporate employee organizations to form their own TeamMS and make a mile of difference by participating in the MS Walk.

During the weekends of March 29, April 18 and 19, the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society will hold 17 walks across Massachusetts to support cutting-edge new research and to fund vital support services for thousands of local families living with this difficult, unpredictable disease.

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system that wears away the control you have over your own body. MS is often diagnosed in young adults, ages 20-40, and affects a third of a million Americans. The symptoms range from numbness to paralysis, blindness and speech disorders.

No one can predict the course it will take in any individual.

Local sponsors include: WJDA, Kimball's By The Sea, Stop & Shop, Dunkin Donuts, General Suburban Aid/REACT. To find out how you can participate in the MS Walk as either an individual walker, on a team or by serving as a volunteer, call 1 (508) 291-2169.

Accomplish fitness with a personal touch

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Donna Bailey has never been one to lack motivation when it comes to exercising on a consistent basis. Whether it be working out with weights or attending as many as five aerobics classes per week, Bailey attacked her training with passion and desire to stay in shape.

Bailey was hardly what one would term out of shape. Still, the 45-year-old Rockland High School teacher and artist felt she should have been getting more back from the effort she was putting out in the gym.

Today, Bailey feels as strong and as fit as she ever has. And she credits its personal trainer Craig Huntington for her vast improvement.

The 26-year-old Huntington, founder of Huntington Fitness Company of Hanover, began training Bailey two years ago while working at Marshfield's Workout Club. It didn't take Bailey long to see the results of Huntington's short but highly intensive sessions.

Bailey was curious about Huntington's approach to training when she first met him at the club.

"I wasn't making any significant changes through my workouts," Bailey said. "I saw him working with some people at the club and decided to give it a try.

"I was skeptical in the beginning and now I'm one of his biggest fans. My original intention was to spend a week doing the workouts with him and then doing them on my own. But I decided to go another week and have been a client ever since.

"It was a whole different way of training for me — very time efficient. I started to see results in two weeks. I wasn't lacking motivation. I was lacking results. And I've been getting the results I've been looking for. I'm a pretty motivated and intense person, but Craig pushes you that much further."

A training session with Huntington lasts only 15 minutes, but there is no wasted time involved. Rest between the three to four exercises per session is brief and then it's back to work. A session with Huntington is all work, with the goal of continual improvement in overall strength.

"Basically, I want every client to surpass the previous workout," said Huntington, who began training with weights at the age of 15 and went on to compete in the national bodybuilding championships while attending UMass-Amherst. "I monitor my clients very closely. If they're not progressing, I'm not doing my job. The intensity factor is the most important thing."

While at UMass, Huntington began working informally with friends. He was the Workout Club's personal trainer and began to build a modest clientele. Huntington then took the plunge and opened his own studio on April 1, 1996.

The business was slow going at first, but has "taken off" over the past six months. Huntington personally trains 30 clients and has a full schedule with 65 to 70 appointments per week.

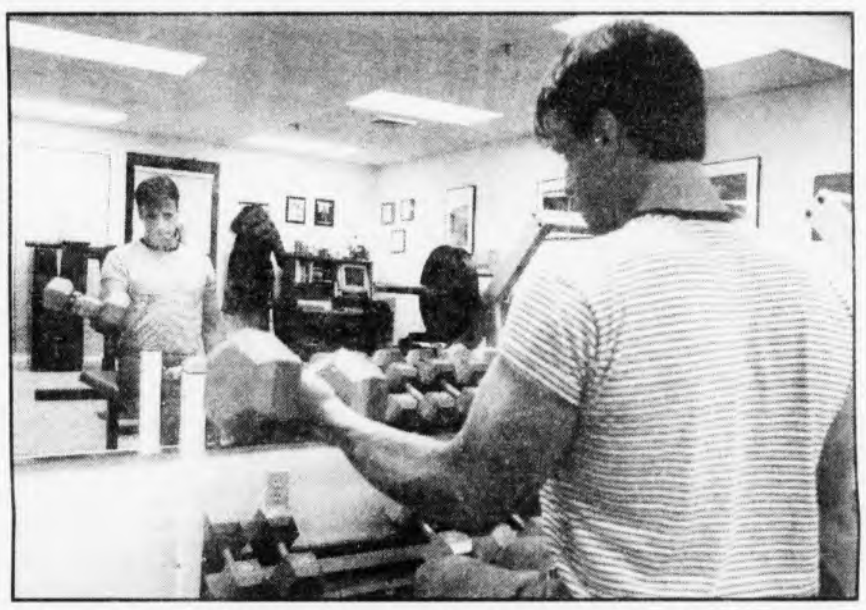
Huntington makes it a point to keep detailed records of a client's progress, and plans in advance the workout he or she will be doing. They only need to bring a strong commitment and willingness to work — and work hard — when they arrive for a session.

"I can plan someone's next workout very quickly," he said. "It's all based on their previous session. My father always told me, 'If you fail to plan you plan to fail.' It's a favorite expression of mine."

Bailey says one of Huntington's greatest strengths as a personal trainer is that of motivator. While the workouts are arduous, he is right there, giving encouragement and pushing for those three more repetitions clients might not otherwise have had the confidence to attempt — much less complete — on their own. Positive reinforcement, combined with training schedules specifically designed for each client, keeps them excited about working out. Huntington is able to tap into the strength and determination his clients never knew they had.

Huntington said personal training is on the rise, but finds the number of people who lack the qualifications for the job "disturbing." He believes people should ask a lot of questions and be wary before taking on a personal trainer.

He recommends people who are considering a personal trainer to get references and, if possible, talk to other clients.



Huntington said he enjoys when clients ask questions about a particular workout. He is more than happy to explain the benefits and how they fit into the overall training program designed for that person.

"I want them to understand what I'm saying and what direction I'm heading in," Huntington said. "That's very important."

Ready for a regime?

Before starting an exercise program, it's wise to consult your physician to be sure you're ready for your new fitness regime.

"Exercise in general is the best thing you can do for yourself, but just as you wouldn't drive your car without a tune-up, you need to get your body checked, too," says Anne Tarry, MD. "People should be up-to-date with their routine summary, including blood pressure, heart rate and diabetes screening."

High blood pressure can be a hidden ailment, notes Tarry, who practices internal medicine at East Street Medical Center, Hanover, and has a South Shore Hospital affiliation. A worst case scenario is stroke, she says, coming on when weight lifting increases inter-cranial pressure. "People can be unaware of their diabetes and become dehydrated and more fatigued," she notes. Someone with an irregular heart rate runs the risk of making the condition worse by tackling an exercise program unawares.

Relating a personal history of injury or aches and pains is important, too. "You need to be sure you don't stress tendons and joints unnecessarily," Tarry says.

Results from a fitness program happen when the body is ready. "Exercise is a process of building by breaking down," Tarry says. "You break down muscles to build them back stronger. But if you're not ready for an exercise program, there won't be benefit.

"It's like the famous example of Jim Fixx, the marathon runner who died of a heart attack. You can be in good shape, but some of these things are medical things."

—Helen Graves

Do you want to be the strongest and fittest you've ever been in your life?

Craig Huntington, an ACE certified personal trainer, can help you reach your fitness goals with high intensity strength training. Properly supervised high intensity workouts are proven to be the fastest, safest and most effective way to exercise. 15-20 minutes, 2-3 times a week will build muscle, improve flexibility and boost metabolism at any age. Annual spelling bee is fun-filled event

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The March 11 fourth Spelling Bee sponsored by the Cohasset Education Foundation produced a "cross pollination" of excited and enthusiastic spellers, friends, and neighbors who turned out for this annual fun-filled fund raiser.

Twenty-five teams of three competed for first and second place. After several lively rounds over two hours, first place went to Goodwin Graphics spellers, Paul Dowling, Rich Fitzpatrick and George Ayob. Each team member received a "dinner for two" gift certificate to the Silver Spoon Restaurant.

Second place winner was the Osgood Neighbor Bees, comprised of Pam Speed, Jane Ellis and Meg Moore, who each received a one-month membership to Fitness First.

For those already brushing up on their spelling words for next year's Bee, the championship round of words included "gazetteer," "scotopia," "bathymeter," and "recondite."

Holding the winning raffle ticket for the "trip for two" to Rome was Jean and Steve Hajjar of Heather Drive. Upon receiving the winner announcement telephone call that evening from CEF president, Michael Hurley, Jean Hajjar thought it was a prank call, but is happily busy now, planning their trip to Rome this spring.

Prior to the Spelling Bee, a reception was held at Cohasset High School, inviting the town in to experience the newly installed Language Lab that CEF's effort and dollars saw to fruition. Language Lab teachers and CEF board members were on hand to greet the public and answer questions.

CHL demands action on town landfill violations

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill are demanding that the town halt unauthorized excavation work near being done near the town-owned Cedar Street landfill in a wetland that abuts the facility. CHL is also demanding that the town comply with a Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) order to restore the wetland to its original condition.

CHL-owner Paul Barry filed his complaint last week with the conservation commission. After listening to the complaint, conservation commission Chairman Jeff Waal asked Barry what steps he wanted the town to take to repair any damage to the wetlands near the Cedar Street facility. Barry became visibly angered by Waal's statement.

"I get kind of offended when you ask me that," Barry said. "You always know what to do when it's my landfill and when it's me before your commission. You know what the violations are and what has to be done. Now do it."

The Cedar Street landfill is closed and capped and currently serves the town as a transfer facility. On March 5, 1997, CHL filed a complaint with the conservation commission against the Cedar Street landfill and the town for allowing siltation to runoff into the wetlands, damaging the area and killing vegetation. The conservation commission failed to respond to the complaint within 21 days as required by law, and CHL filed a complaint with DEP.

> "There could be batteries, solvent, paint."
> —ROD GASKELL, CHL'S ENGINEERING CONSULTANT

On Oct. 28, 1997, DEP ruled that the wetland where the excavation was being done, known as Breadencheese Swamp, fell under the jurisdiction of the Wetlands Protection Act. DEP said any excavation to remove siltation must stop and the town would have to file a notice of intent outlining its purpose for working in the wetland.

In its ruling, DEP noted that the town had filed a notice of intent as part of its closure plan. However, DEP ruled that the town was still obligated to file a new notice of intent for the excavation work.

The conservation commission must also issue an order of conditions for any work to remove siltation or to restore the wetland. In addition, any wetland area altered by the excavation would have to be restored to its pre-existing condition.

CHL's engineering consultant, Rod Gaskell, outlined the damage done to Breadencheese Swamp by siltation from the town landfill. Gaskell said Breadencheese Swamp was essentially a Red Maple Swamp until siltation from the town landfill killed many of the maples and turned the swamp into an unvegetated pond.

He said a six-acre area was affected by the siltation, which ranged in depth from six-inches to three-feet deep.

Gaskell said the excavation work being done by the town to remove siltation has also uncovered trash from the capped landfill, creating a potential health and safety hazard.

"There could be batteries, solvent, paint," Gaskell said. "This material dates back to an era when landfilling was unregulated. Some of this stuff is really nasty and should be defined. This siltation removal is supposedly being done under the closure plan notice of intent, but I don't see how this qualifies for that."

Gaskell said the town needs to clearly outline its objectives for working in the wetland.

"Are you trying to restore this to a Red Maple Swamp?" Gaskell wondered. "What is your purpose for excavating?"

Gaskell said the town should comply with DEP's ruling. In addition, the town should file a notice of intent, perform a comprehensive study of the damage, define what kind of materials are involved, and outline a clear [illegible] to remove siltation and [illegible] the wetland.

The conservation commi[illegible] took the matter under advisement.

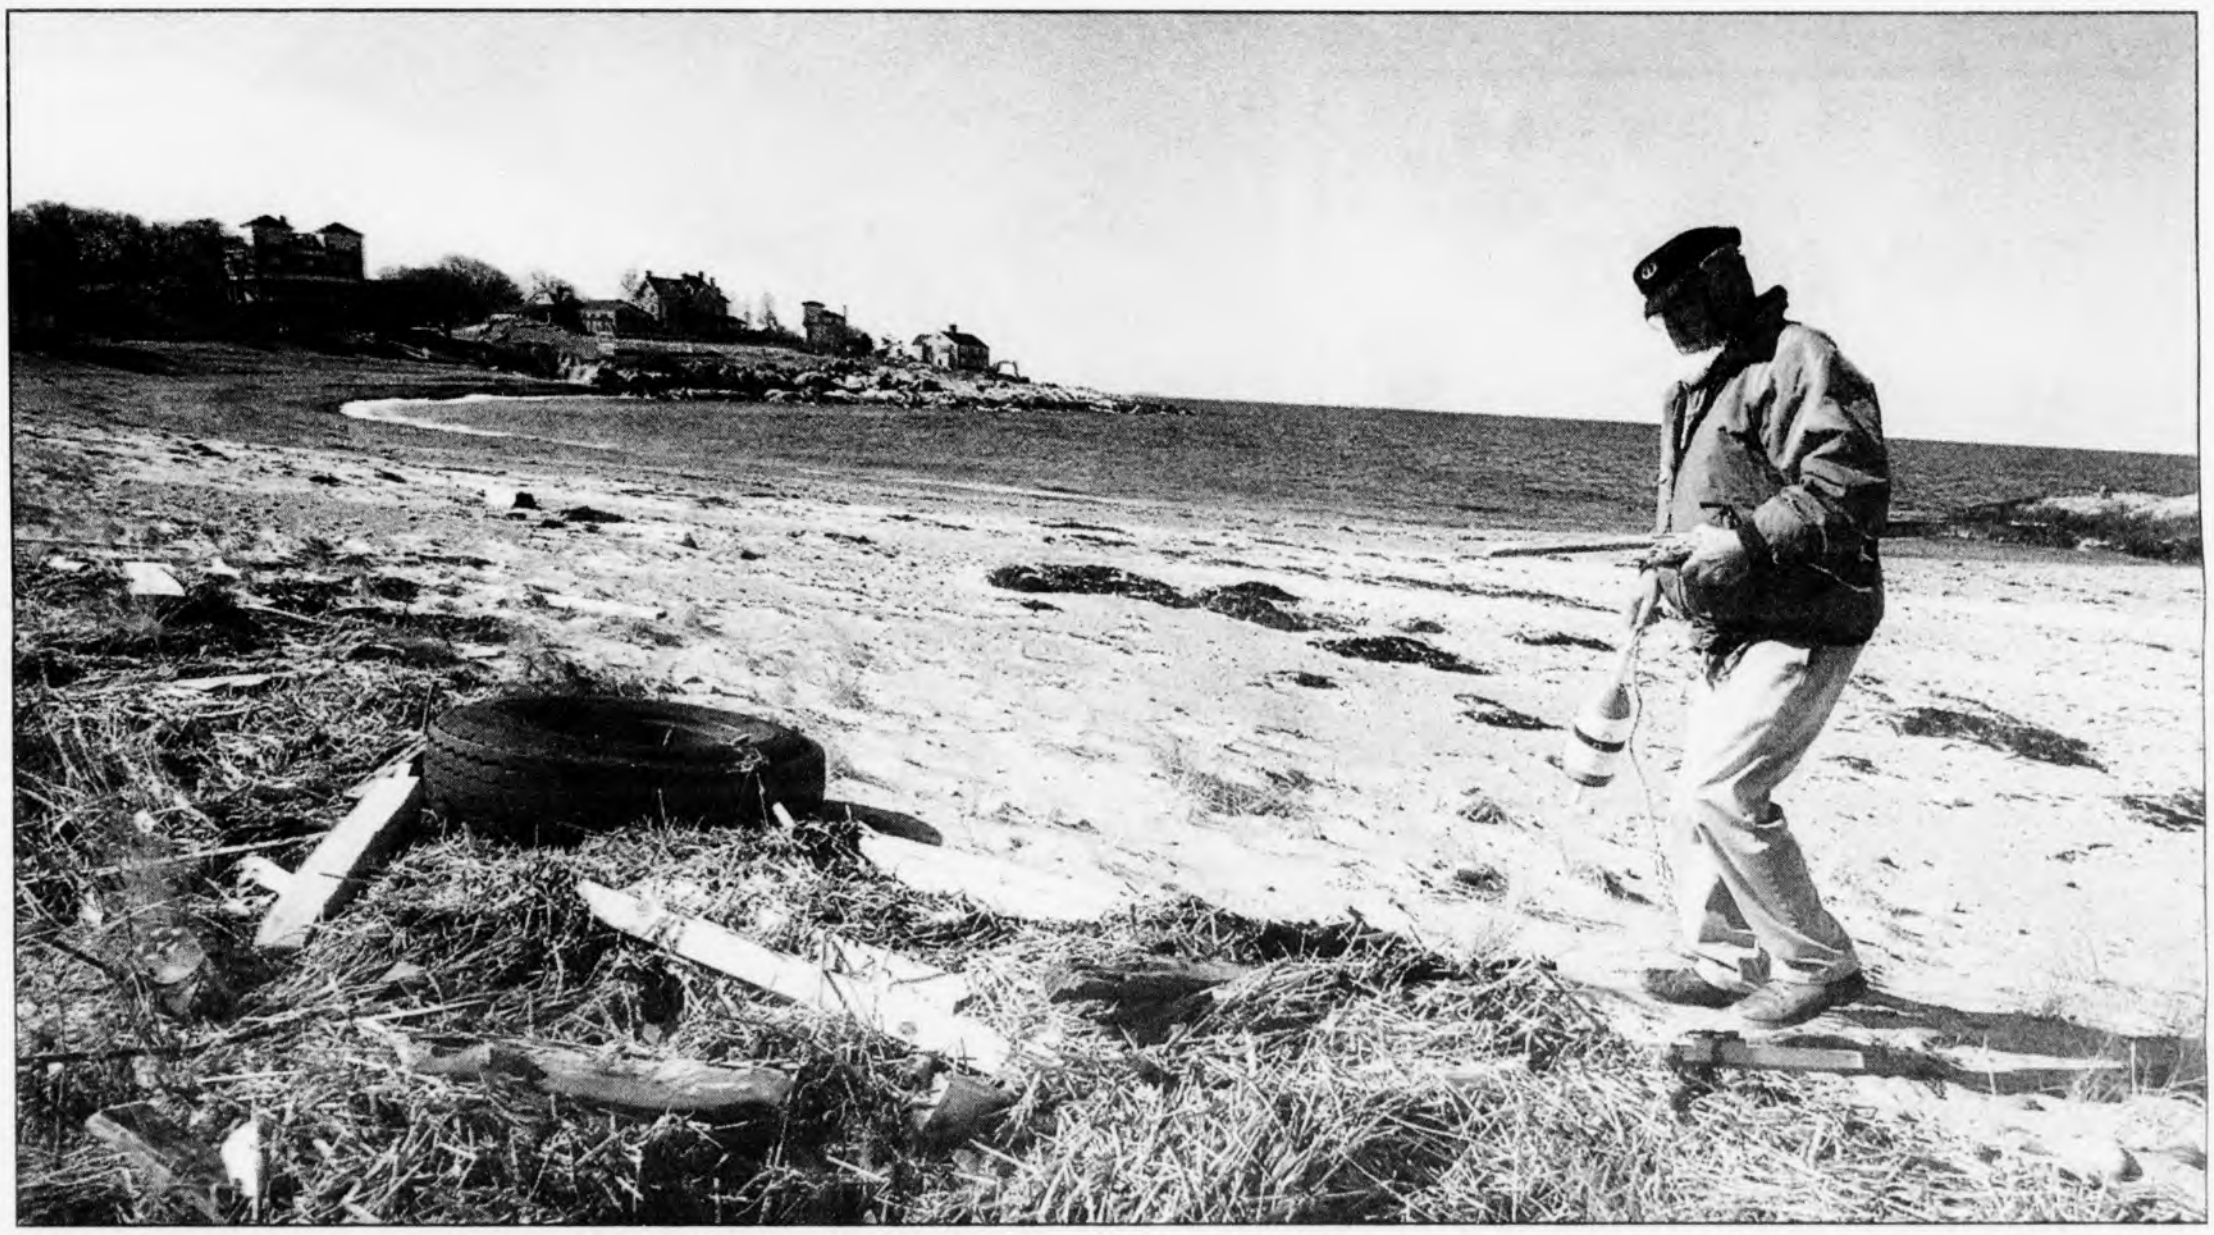
'Healthy' voter turnout expected Saturday

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

This year's April 4 town election is shaping up as a story of the political newcomers. Potentially, half of the 14 town offices at stake could go to candidates running in their first election. Four are mathematically assured of victory already. Newcomers will take the election for assessor and health board where they face no opponents. One more will land a seat on the board of library trustees. Only one will have to unseat an incumbent to get in.



The polls are open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at town hall.

Town clerk Marion Douglas sees a "good race" in the strong field and the high number of new people testing the political waters. She expects a healthy 40 percent turnout at the polls. About 5,415 people are eligible to vote, she said Wednesday. March 7 was the deadline for new voter registrations.

Like last year, there will be a write-in campaign. Elsa Miller of 60 Reservoir Road has decided to go after the assessor's term. Douglas said Miller's name will not appear on the ballot. To vote for her, people must write Miller's name and address on the write-in line but must be sure to darken the oval by her name, too. The machine will not tabulate votes unless the oval is full. Douglas said the voters will use special pens to fill out the ballot.

Miller said she has paid for clip-in coupons for her write-in campaign. She did not order stickers because she was told they would not fit on the ballot.

Town meeting torpedoes subsidized sewer hookups

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

As it stands now, about 200 homeowners in North Cohasset will have to pay privately to hook up to the sewer without the benefit of taxpayer subsidy or state grants.

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES), a grassroots group vehemently opposed to the town's sewer plan, rallied enough support at Saturday's town meeting to defeat two warrant articles — or items of business — which would have provided financial help for the affected homeowners.

The sewer debate took place during the first session of town meeting which drew upwards of 250 citizens.

Not all the business before town meeting was accomplished Saturday, so town meeting continued

Advisors adapt to new budget role

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

For decades the advisory committee has served as the town's budget experts. Municipal departments have traditionally submitted annual budget proposals to the advisory committee for inspection, advice, modifications and finally a recommendation that best served the community. But with the implementation of the town manager form of government, that has all changed.

Town Manager Mark Haddad is now in charge of all municipal budgets, as well as the town's operating budget. The advisory committee now gets a town budget that

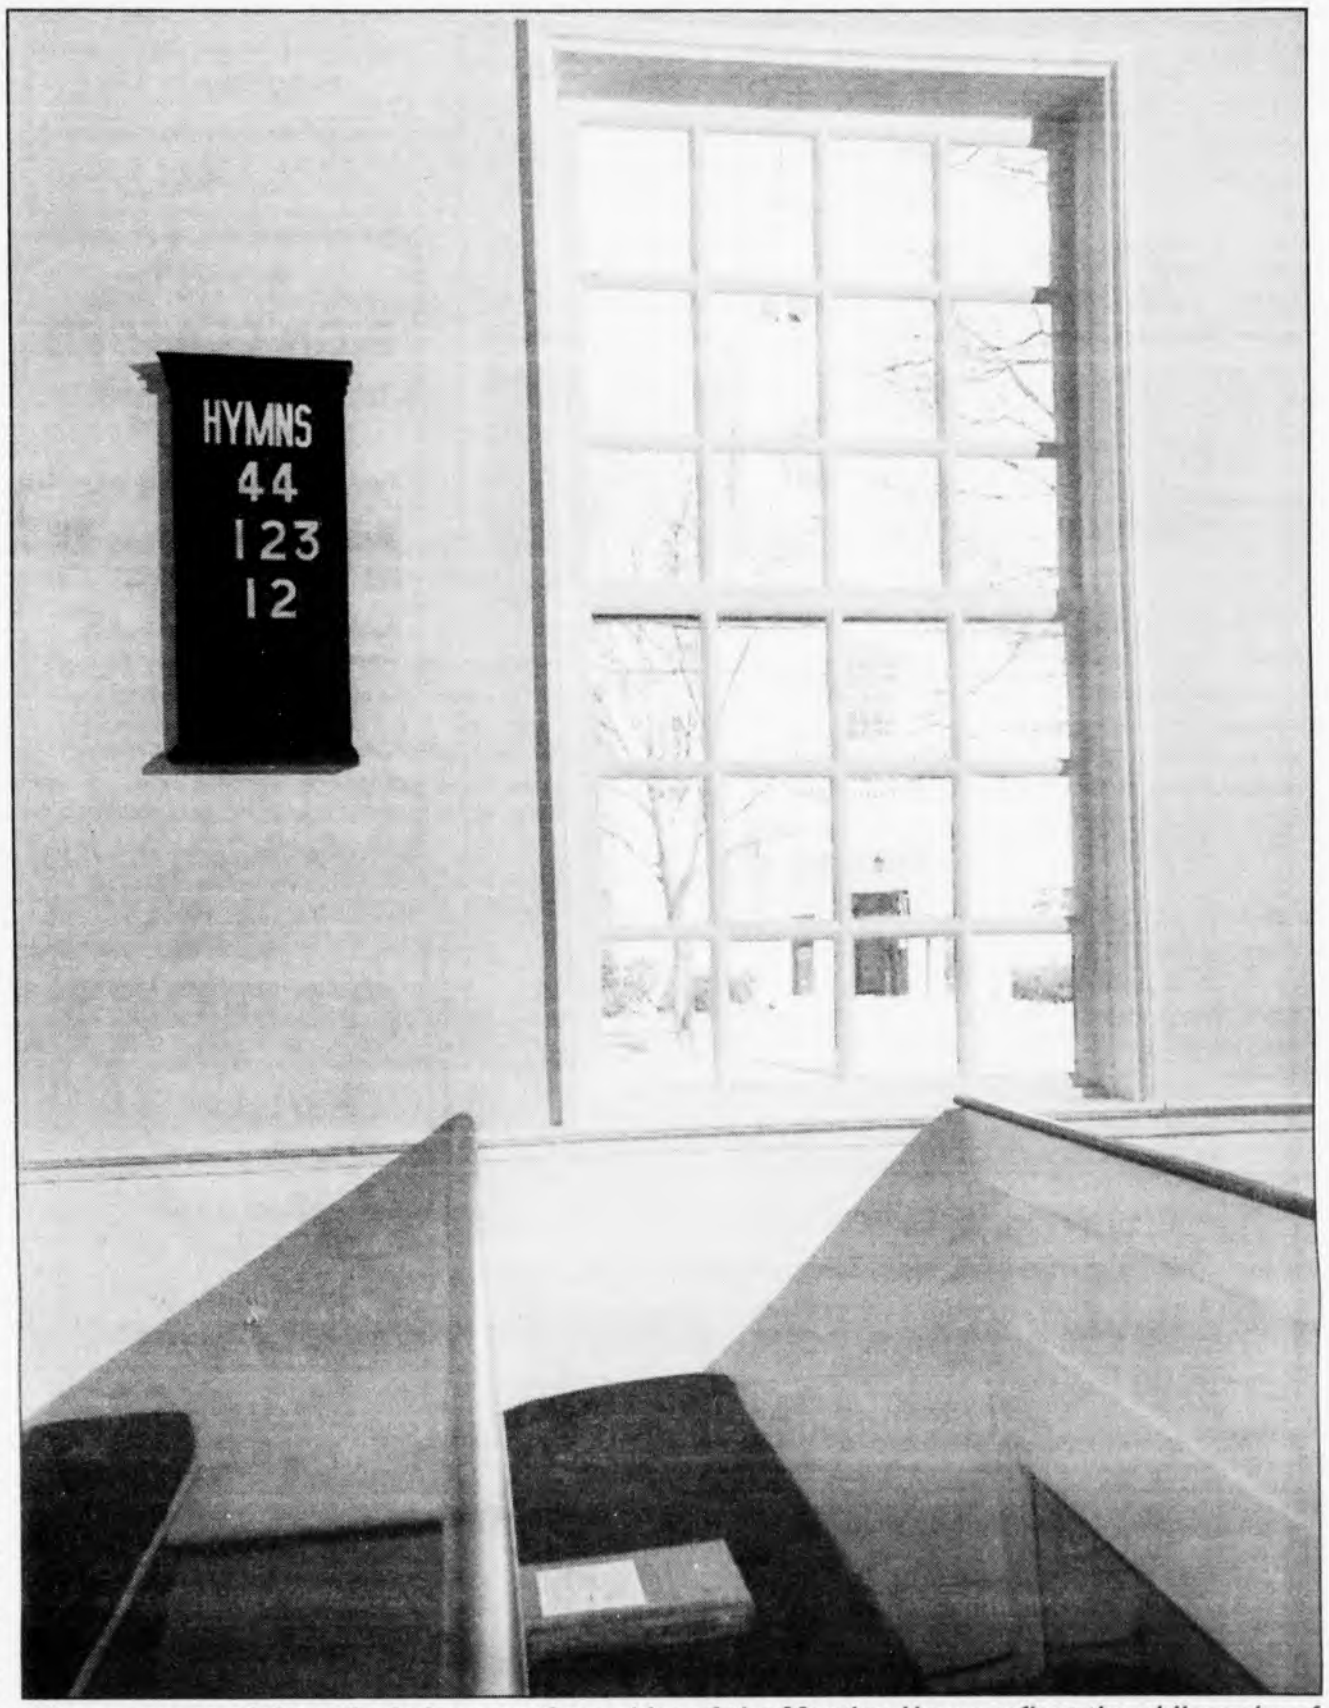
Meeting House was once site of town meeting

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The First Parish could claim the right to be called the most famous building in Cohasset because scenes in the movie "The Witches of Eastwick" were filmed there. The Meeting House is among 94 buildings on the Cohasset Historical Society's Heritage Tour. But the authors of the new Heritage Trail guide had more than film credits in mind when they pointed out the Town of Cohasset owned the church until 1824.

A few words spoken at town meeting Saturday did sound unlike things that should be said in church. But a church is precisely where the town's first decisions were debated. When the voters poured over the $18.5 million budget this weekend and argued the questions of "punishment" and "fairness" implicit in sewers and fire hydrants, they faithfully followed the forms of parish government that once appropriated $2,187 to build the Meeting House. The form of the session, down to the creakiest of its traditions, dates back to the parish meetings held inside the Meeting House. Literally, the "church was the town" until the early nineteenth century, according to John Hartshorne. Even today, after the state and church separated, the signs of the past are as big as the numerals on the bell tower clock. Perhaps no other building in Cohasset embodies so much town history as the white church on the Town Common.

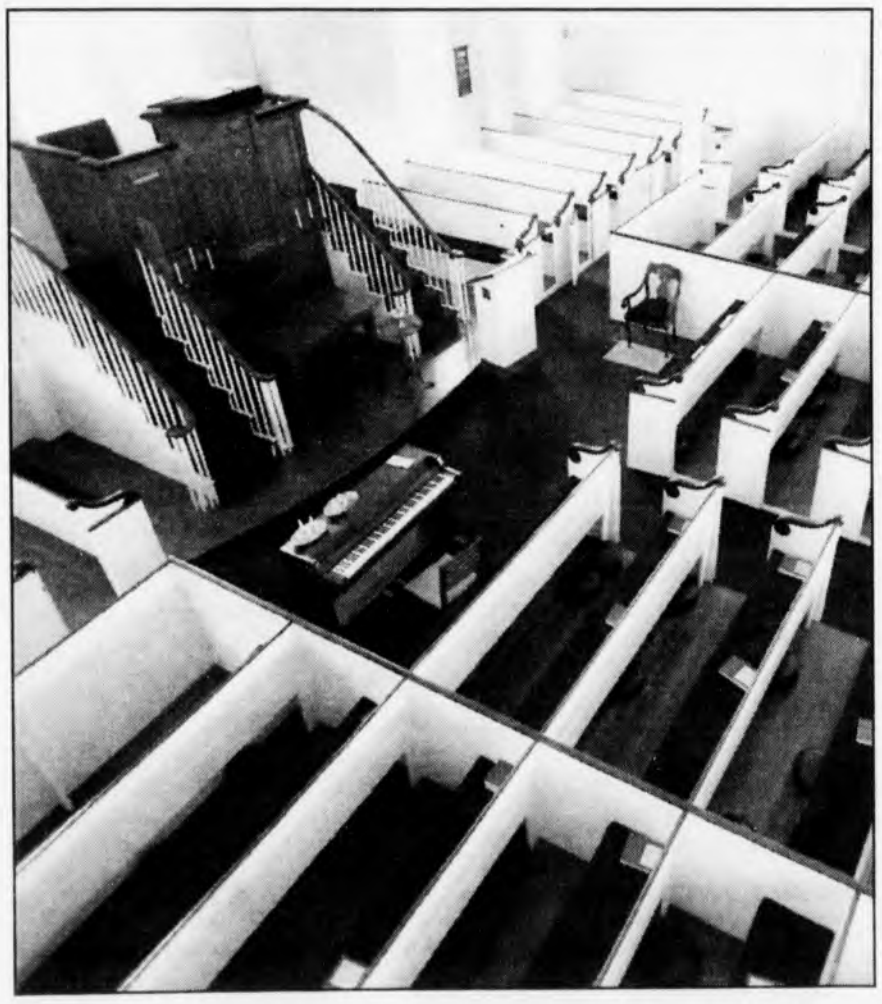
Hartshorne is a member of the church's maintenance committee, and he knows the structure "from the top of the steeple down." But in an interview Wednesday, he pointed out a few features of the Meeting House that recall the once close connection between the parish and the management of the town. For instance, the clock on the bell tower is owned and maintained by the town. It was a gift from the church.



"It's part of the interesting history of the church," he said. "The clock was a very important thing in the life of the town." Hartshorne said it was installed in 1864 in an era when people did not have wrist watches and clocks were expensive luxuries. The church clock became the only convenient and reliable way to tell time. Moreover, pranksters could not tamper with the clock as easily as with the church bell. Boys liked to ring the "1000 weight" bell at the wrong times. (The effort to stop them spawned legislation.) The bell tower, with its rough hewn interior ladder, was not part of the original 1747 Meeting House. It was raised in 1799 along with the steeple.

Hartshorne also said the original parish meetings eventually evolved into the town government meeting. Originally, only parishioners could vote at them. Once again, the signs of the past are evident in today's custom. For instance, parishioners "seldom use the term church," he said.

"It's always called the Meeting House." Hartshorne said overall the architecture is meant to reflect the spirit of the Unitarian Church. As a former minister Edward Trivett Atkinson put it, the windows and the openness of the room symbolized the "openness of the philosophy of the Unitarian Church." It was important, Hartshorne said, to see people inside can look out and people outside can look in.



"There are no stained glass windows. There is no thought of exclusion," he said. Tall windows encase three sides of the Meeting House. Rev. Atkinson

The openness of the tall windows on three sides of the Meeting House reflect the philosophy of the church. Here, the Second Congregational Church is visible across the common.

The pews, which were once deeded to parishioners, still have doors that can be shut and locked with brass latches.

Heritage Trail Guide available

It was time for a new Heritage Trail Guide from the Cohasset Historical Society. As Thomas Gruber put it, so much time has gone by since the original 1970 guide was published, even some of the natives forgot why some of the oldest houses in Cohasset bore plaques with the letters HT. Moreover, Gruber said most of the new residents never had an opportunity to find out what the plaques mean. To compound the problem, the old guide was not readily available.

The mystery about the plaques and the numbers is a mystery no more. The new guides are ready, and they are free, Gruber said. They can be picked up at four locations in the village (Flemings, Cards & Shards, Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank and the Hingham Institution for Savings.) Copies are also on hand on Route 3A at Buttonwood Books and Toys and Noble's.

Gruber said the society thought it time "to refocus on that part of our heritage" represented by historic buildings. The authenticity of the 94 in the guide has been verified. The panel also made some corrections to the previous book and one major change. The old version listed the house names after the current owner. The new book names the house after the first owner or a person of historic interest.

Gruber said the society tried to add at least one item of interest about each entry, while keeping the book brief. He said each copy also contains an offer to join the society. They are looking for new members, he said.

The First Parish Meeting House was once the site of town meeting where parish government was conducted.

Meeting House was once site of town meeting

also brought in the low pulpit, actually a "lectern" which the minister uses during the service. He was the first to stop climbing the long staircase to the original pulpit. The original, under a white wood canopy, offers a vista almost eye level with the gallery. It is made of carved pine. Inside it, the bench is upholstered with red velvet cushions. An 1893 Bible, a gift of the Ladies Charitable Society, rests on the lectern. It is banked by staircases on both sides and long curved balustrades.

Hartshorne said the pews were once deeded to parishioners. They still have doors that can be shut and locked with brass latches. The floors inside are hardwood, but the worshippers are supplied with round red cushions. Other details of the Colonial era are the wood buttons on the arms of the pew. Like the pulpit, the benches, with scroll-like arms, show "very nice joinery and carpentry." Other features are the Morel Organ in the gallery, the ceiling medallion and the white fluted columns.

Barbara Bliss, the chairwoman of the parish committee, said the Meeting House was built in 1747. It replaced an earlier 1711 Meeting House nearby. Though First Parish has postponed commemorating the building's 250th year, she hoped people would be aware the tradition and the heritage are something to celebrate.

into a second session Monday evening.

After Saturday's session, Lisa Bumstead, 111 Nichols Road, spokeswoman for CEES, said defeat was the only way to force the town to rebid the North Cohasset project which came in more than 40 percent or $2.7 million over estimates.

"We're not trying to punish anyone," she said. "The point was to rebid."

But it's not clear if those phases of the project will be rebid.

After town meeting, Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said phases three and four are now dead until further notice because there is no appropriation and that homeowners in those phases will have to contract privately for their own sewer hookups.

"Contracts three and four" are the two final parts of the now $9 million North Cohasset sewer project, which will connect about 260 homes to the treatment plant in Hull. Phase one lays pipe throughout the district and phase two hooks up the homes along Straits Pond to the sewer main. Straits Pond is designated by the state as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern and therefore is a priority to be sewered, commissioners said.

Hook ups for homes in phases three and four were only included in the project because the town could obtain favorable state financing for the homeowners.

Because town meeting did not approve appropriating the additional $2.7 million needed for those phases, it is not clear if they can be rebid without the money.

The project was initially bid in October. Those bids were thrown out because they were too high. The project was rebid in December when the bids came in about $1 million less although still about 41 percent over engineer's estimates. (Based on those estimates, last year town meeting appropriated $6.6 million for the North Cohasset project).

Bumstead, the CEES spokeswoman, said the group would like the entire project rebid and lumped in with central Cohasset to get economies of scale. She also said the Little Harbor area should be included in the sewer plan. CEES is comprised of residents who were placed into the town's priority districts around Lily Pond, Little Harbor, Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue and Nichols Road to fulfill the terms of a legal agreement with the state requiring the town to solve its wastewater management problems.

(CEES is fighting forced septic systems inspections and possible upgrades, and won a reprieve at town meeting approving $45,000 to study Little Harbor — which puts off the septic management plan).

Town counsel said there is an escape clause in the contracts for phases one and two of the North Cohasset project allowing the town to back out. The only liability the town faces is the costs incurred by the contractor to that point, Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said. So selectmen have the option of not going through with the contracts for phases one and two, although the bids for those phases have been awarded.

It is not clear if rebidding the project will bring the price down.

Hingham is currently sewering 140 homes near the Weir River in a $4.5 million project that includes a pump station, which Cohasset will share in and contributed $500,000 toward, and capacity in the Hull treatment plant. Seventy of the homes will have pressure systems similar to those planned for North Cohasset. Pressure systems are used where gravity systems are not practical. They are more expensive than gravity systems because they require installation of a pump and tank but are more economical in ledge areas because they require far less blasting.

Bids for the Hingham project were opened last week and were 30 percent over estimates. The town had agreed to pay 50 percent of the project and Hingham Sewer Commissioner John Brandt said it hasn't been decided if users will absorb the overage.

Selectman Merle Brown told town meeting that projects can be bid subject to future appropriation, but Guild didn't think that's an option.

"Who's going to bid on that?" Guild asked in a telephone interview. "As a practical matter, contractors see two bids with no award and talk of cancellation of part of the second bid. And then we ask them to make a speculative bid."

Town meeting's action left many homeowners stunned.

After article 17 was defeated (it would have set the stage for an override to split the cost overrun with all taxpayers), James Lagrotteria, 104 Howe Road, implored town meeting not to deny him access to state grants by also defeating article 18.

"You have no right to deny me the opportunity to take advantage of state funds to spend my own money to hook up," he said.

Article 17 would have appropriated the additional funds contingent on the passage of a $1.3 million override April 4 so half the cost would have been spread among all taxpayers. If the override failed, the affected homeowners would have had to pay for the entire cost of the project through betterments. Article 18 was included in the warrant in case article 17 failed. If article 18 had passed, the town would have appropriated the money but the affected homeowners would have paid for their sewer hookups through betterments with no impact on the tax rate. In either case, homeowners would have received highly favorable financing through 50 percent state equivalency grants, sewer commissioners said.

Steven Magnell, 58 Howe Road, also tried to persuade town meeting to help those in phases three and four.

"I think it's a travesty," he said about the defeat of the articles.

Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, lives in phase two and urged voters to defeat the articles and let homeowners take care of their own hookups, which she believes will be cheaper.

She claimed the town is being held hostage by greedy contractors.

"Let us hookup on our own," Plante said.

Article 17 was defeated by a vote of 89 to 141. Although a majority backed article 18 — with a vote of 141-103 — it failed to win the 161 votes necessary for adoption. Borrowing articles require a 2/3 vote.

Town meeting says no parkland for T right-of-way

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A proposal to use the Greenbush right-of-way as leverage in the town's dealings with the MBTA fell a few votes shy of getting the required two-thirds needed for passage at Monday's session of town meeting.

The plan was to designate the right-of-way as parkland. That way the T would have to get a two-thirds vote of the Legislature before it could take it back for the railroad, Michael Dick of the mitigation committee said.

The T plans to restore train service on the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad. The train will travel through Cohasset on its way to and from Greenbush which is part of Scituate.

The mitigation committee is charged with negotiating with the T to mitigate the adverse effects of the train such as noise, vibration and safety issues.

"The T's response to our needs has been lacking," Dick said. "This would give our town a little leverage that others have not."

Cohasset owns the right-of-way, which is currently designated as open space. By changing the designation to parkland, it would make it harder for the T to take it by eminent domain.

"Under the state constitution, they could not take it without a two-thirds vote of the Legislature," Dick said.

He explained that the town could be "happy for the T to take the land if they'd done right by us, but if they'd done wrong by us then we'd go to the legislative committee to address our needs."

But Dan Evans, speaking for the advisory committee, recommended against the proposal describing it as "legal shenanigans."

"While we are sympathetic that the T needs watching," he said, "this asks us to make a park out of something we know won't be a park."

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who sits on the mitigation committee, said the proposal may help the town with future negotiations.

"It may or may not work, it may or may not boomerang," she said.

Nancy Butler, 56 Margin St., questioned if the action was legal.

Town meeting voted 83-54 for the proposal but 90 votes were needed for the two-third majority required.

In the main events, two selectmen and two new school board members will be elected Saturday when the voters cast their ballots. Merle Brown is the only incumbent in the two races. He is seeking a new three year term on the board of selectmen. Two former selectmen are in the field against him. Martha Gjesteby and Rocco Laugelle hope to regain office on the board. The lone political newcomer in the selectmen's race is William Ross. Thomas Callahan, a member of the Conservation Commission, rounds out the field of five. He mounted an unsuccessful bid for the selectmen's seat in last year's election.

In the race for two school board seats, one will be left out. Mark DeGiacomo, the zoning board chairman, is the only candidate with town board experience. Hugh Morgan is in his second campaign. He ran unsuccessfully for school committee last year. Patricia Martin is the newcomer in that race.

Eight races will be uncontested. Political newcomer Stephen Bobo of 292 Jerusalem Road wins a seat on the health board because his opponent Michael Spirito reportedly has said he has dropped out of the race. Douglas said it was too late to take his name off the ballot. It had already been printed when Spirito notified her. As mentioned, Miller is expected to take the assessor's election in a write-in campaign. She was long interested in running but did not want to face the previous incumbent Ross Rosano. He is a friend, and she liked the job he did. She said she was busy with family and did not notice no one was running for the post until after the deadline.

Miller said she did not exactly view herself as a political newcomer although this election will be her first.

"I don't want to go into politics," she said. "I don't look at this as a political position." Miller said she hoped to use her experience as an appraiser to "fine-tune" assessments in Cohasset. She said appraisals are done by computers using mathematical modeling but sometimes contain errors. She said she could help the assessor's office detect errors and otherwise explain assessments to the public. Miller owns Miller's Appraisals in Cohasset. She is a Massachusetts state-certified residential appraiser and currently handles properties in Hingham, Hull and Scituate, primarily. She has also worked on the 1980's revaluation of Back Bay and Beacon Hill property for the City of Boston through Property Systems.

Incumbents get free return trips in only three races. Robert Sturdy goes back to the planning board. Robert Kasameyer stays on as water commissioner, and Richard Barrow keeps his post on the recreation commission. Incumbent sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury battles Patrick Plante for that seat. Finally, two political newcomers, Jamie Williams and Carol Riley, face off in a run for a two-year unexpired term for library trustee.

'Pay per Throw' disposal proposal trashed

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset residents will continue to be able to buy any kind of trash bags they want.

The proposed "Pay per Throw" trash disposal system didn't survive Monday's session of the annual town meeting.

The theory behind the program — which is used successfully in some other towns including Halifax — is that people will recycle more to keep from having to use more special bags which would cost a dollar apiece to dispose of their trash.

Selectman Merle Brown said "Pay per Throw" would save the town money because with more recycling, there would be less sent to SEMASS, the waste to energy plant in Rochester, where Cohasset's trash goes after it leaves the RTF. The town pays $80 a ton to send its trash to SEMASS.

He said people who use less trash would pay less. Currently all residents pay $65 for a sticker to use the RTF regardless of how much household trash they throw away every week.

"I support the goal, but this is not the appropriate way to achieve it. It's discriminatory."
– MARTIN CORRY, PLEASANT STREET

Martin Corry, 81 Pleasant St., said he thought the program was unfair.

"I support the goal, but this is not the appropriate way to achieve it," he said. "It's discriminatory."

Corry said families with children would end up paying much more under the proposed system.

Ron Massa, 140 N. Main St., led the charge against the program.

He said the average resident would end up paying $100-$150 a year with "Pay per Throw" — two to three times what they are paying now.

Alex Koines, 380 Atlantic Ave., said there is an awful lot going into the bin at the RTF that could be recycled.

"This is something we can live with if you choose to recycle and are diligent. I urge you to vote yes," he said.

But with a vote of 54-72, town meeting turned down "Pay per Throw."

Locke guest at drug and alcohol meeting

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee said that Norfolk County District Attorney Jeffrey Locke will be the guest speaker at its April 8 meeting.

The meeting will be held in the A.V. Studio at the Cohasset High School at 7:30 p.m. Parents, students, and members of the community are urged to attend.

Topics to be discussed by the district attorney will be: party host responsibility; memorandum of agreement between the schools, the police department and the district attorney's office; prom night; procedures for first-time juvenile offenders; CDART (Community Drug Action Response Team).

The program will end with a question and answer period.

Osgood School celebration slated

A photo exhibit for the Osgood School will be held from June 5-7, Harborfest Weekend. Do you have photos of your children at Osgood? Photos of other generations at Osgood? Photos of yourself or friends taken there?

These snapshots will help tell the story of Osgood over the last 70 years. They can be funny, serious, playful and all of them will be historical (of students, teachers, parents and staff)! Please check your photo albums (or those shoe boxes) for what you might contribute (color or black and white). Color photocopies are also welcome.

Also displayed will be an Osgood Family Tree. If there are family members who have attended Osgood for three generations (i.e., grandfather, father, daughter), please submit photos as a group.

Submit photos at the drop off box (office) at Joseph Osgood School. Large envelopes will be supplied for you, along with a simple form to be filled out, so that photos may be returned to you.

The deadline is Friday, May 15.

For more information about the photo exhibit, call Derry Schwantner at 383-2529 or Margot Cheel at 383-9184. For more information about the family tree, call Rose Collins at 383-0760.

Boston College High School has named students who have made the second term honor roll, and once again there are Cohasset students to be proud of: John R. Crowley-Ruck who made high honors; Jason S. McCaffrey who made honors; Benjamin T. Smoot who made high honors; and Robert C. Morgan who made honors. Congratulations to all of you!

PRESIDENTIAL SCHOLAR

Kelly Tufts, a student at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School, recently took part in the Presidential Classroom Scholars Program in Washington, D.C. Kelly joined 400 high school juniors and seniors from 38 states, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and Qatar. The students spent a week meeting with government leaders and learning about the democratic process firsthand. Highlights for the week included seminars led by U.S. Rep. Tom Davis, CIA Associate Deputy Director for Intelligence Winston P. Wiley, Daily News Columnist Steven V. Roberts, a private tour of the White House, and a performance by the Capitol Steps Comedy troupe. Participants also attended appointments with the offices of their senators and representatives on Capitol Hill, and a seminar on the Floor of the House of Representatives. While Kelly was there she was chosen to place the wreath at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and that was an honor that she will never

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

As Easter approaches, many of us plan on seeing relatives and friends who haven't been around in a while. There are Easter "feasts," and if you are serving a crowd, you probably present them buffet style. Most of us serve the traditional ham with all the fixin's — not only does everyone like it, but it makes a beautiful centerpiece! I usually have another main dish or two to compliment the ham; chicken breasts supreme can be made ahead and frozen, and it is outstanding! Here it is —

CHICKEN BREASTS SUPREME

1/4 cup all-purpose flour
2-1/2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon paprika
12 half chicken breasts, skinned
1/4 cup butter or margarine
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1-1/2 cups half-and half or light cream
1/4 cup dry sherry
1 teaspoon grated lemon peel
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 cup shredded Swiss Cheese
1/2 cup chopped parsley for garnish

Up to one week before serving: On waxed paper, combine flour, salt and paprika; use to coat chicken. In large skillet, in hot butter, lightly brown chicken breasts on both sides.

Add 1/4 cup water and simmer, covered 30 minutes or until almost tender; arrange chicken in freezer and ovenproof 13" by 9" by 2" baking dish. Mix cornstarch with 1/4 cup half-and-half; stir into drippings in skillet. Cook, stirring, over low heat. Gradually stir in remaining half-and-half, sherry, lemon peel and lemon juice; cook, stirring, until thickened; pour over chicken. Freezer-wrap and freeze. On serving day: Remove from freezer, and thaw about four hours or until almost defrosted.

About 50 minutes before serving: Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Heat, covered, 35 minutes or until sauce is bubbly hot. Uncover; sprinkle with cheese; bake until cheese melts and bubbles a bit. Garnish with chopped parsley.

This dish serves 12, hope you enjoy it!

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Time to say 'thanks'

Interspersed with all the town meeting business on Saturday were several "resolutions" that are worthy of note.

Town meeting took the time to thank some special volunteers who have served the town well.

Following Saturday's election — Selectman Michael Sullivan, School Committee members Ralph Kidder and Maureen Jerz, Health Board member Tom Cook and Assessor Ross Rosano will all get a well deserved break.

Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Kidder, Mrs. Jerz, Mr. Cook and Mr. Rosano — for whatever reasons — all decided not to seek reelection this spring.

While we may not have always agreed with their decisions, we've never questioned their dedication and sincerity when it comes to trying to do the best for Cohasset.

If a town can be judged by its volunteerism — then Cohasset can count itself lucky to have citizens like these who willingly give innumerable hours of their time week in and week out to tackle the often difficult, frustrating and exhausting task of governing.

These volunteers have asked nothing in return but the satisfaction of doing the job.

We all owe them a debt of gratitude and wish them well in their future endeavors.

Some old and new faces will be campaigning hard at the polls at town hall on Saturday.

We don't think anyone would argue that the need for talented, hardworking citizens to serve in local government is greater than ever.

Those elected Saturday will be leading Cohasset into the 21st century.

Please take the time to vote. It will send the positive message that you care about Cohasset's future.

CEES must follow through on better sewer funding plan

To the Editor:

At town meeting last Saturday, the Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES) achieved their goal of convincing voters to turn down Articles 17 and 18, which would have provided $2.7 million additional funds needed to complete the North Cohasset sewer project. The opportunity to accept the construction bids, at current market prices on Contracts 3 and 4 of the project, is gone. The opportunity to receive the level of state funding now being offered is also gone. CEES has deprived the town of these opportunities.

CEES have gained influence on a hot issue in town, but with it comes the responsibility to make good on their lofty promises. Reorganizing the scope of sewer work to be bid, finding new construction bids that cost less, and convincing the state to shell out a higher level of financial assistance are noble ideals, but achieving them is a gargantuan task, with unpleasantly high risks for a negative outcome.

For 30-plus years, Cohasset has been working on the sewering issue, and each time it changes its mind, withdraws an old plan and submits a new plan, the state responds with less and less help. State funding is not uniformly available from year to year. Right now, the Big Dig is threatening to divert away much of the money that would have been available to help finish the North Cohasset job, had Article 17 or 18 passed.

The town has spent years sorting through the complexities of the Second Amended Final Judgment for Agreement (hence the words, "Second" and "Amended"). For CEES to tamper with this fragile negotiation between Cohasset and the state by delaying the sewer projects, yet again, seems reckless. In the short time that CEES have been in action, have they researched fully the (lack of) options that Cohasset has to comply? Do they see that over time, what few options the town does have keep getting more costly? I respect CEES' desire for a unified, comprehensive wastewater management plan, but I'm not convinced that it is achievable on their terms.

Now, CEES must prove that their efforts will help the town to solve the sewering problems, instead of making them worse.

Angered by Marina vote

To the Board of Selectmen:

I am sending this letter to express my dismay at the turn of events at the selectmen's meeting of March 23.

At the last minute, to bring up an important and certainly controversial subject, potentially effecting a major project without seeking opinions form people impacted or from various committees involved with the harbor is both suspicious and cowardly, all at the same time.

Why do the selectmen bother to have so many committees if they only consult them when it serves their interest? Why aren't the residents of Parker Avenue asked how this may affect them? To allow 50 additional ships and their attendant traffic will have a far greater impact than Cohasset Colonials did when they were in operation. Anyone who complained that the proposed Lobster Lab would use too many spaces in the Hagerty lot should be opposed to this proposed swap. Where are, say, 45 cars (a little less than half the proposed number of ships) going to park? The marina lot won't hold them all. Residents who own ships certainly have the right to park in the Hagerty lot, but where does that leave the residents who don't own a ship yet still equally have the right to use the lot? Why isn't the Board concerned about this? Certain members made a big issue of this when they were so set against the Lobster Lab. How disingenuous. What is the reason for this sudden decisions? I think it would be amusing to hear the justification for this.

To discuss and vote on a matter of this importance

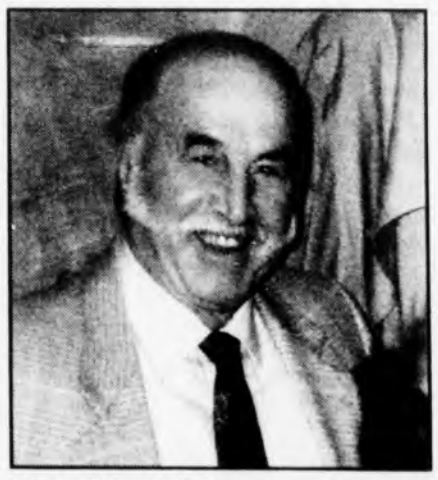
Selectmen

Name: Merle S. Brown
Address: 546 Beechwood St.
Age: 65
Family: Wife, Joan; daughter, Mary and son, Jeffrey.
Education: Degree in mechanical engineering - Northeastern University.
Occupation: Retired.
Years in town: Born in Cohasset.
Civic/municipal experience: Conservation commission (11 years, four as chairman); selectman (six years, two as chairman).
Reason for seeking office: I am running for reelection to the Board of Selectmen so I may continue to work for the citizens of Cohasset. If all boards and committees worked together, I believe all town operations would be more efficient and better understood. The school committee and selectmen must work together to be aware of each other's concerns. The sewer commissioners, the board of health, and the selectmen must find a solution and the best way to handle our solid waste disposal problems. We need to develop a master plan of the entire town on where to sewer and where septic systems will work. The selectmen need to join with surrounding towns to have better services while, together, save money. My last six years as a selectman, and many years in other capacities, has given me much insight while maintaining a common sense approach to the needs of town.

Merle S. Brown



Name: Thomas J. Callahan
Address: 35 Hillside Drive
Age: 39
Family: Wife, Alison; daughter Katie, 8; son, Peter, 5.
Education: BA Boston University, 1980; JD Albany Law School, 1984.
Occupation: Attorney and mediator, self-employed.
Years in town: 12.
Civic/municipal experience: Member, conservation commission, 1989-present (two terms as chairman); member, Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.
Reason for seeking office: I am seeking the office of selectman because I believe we need new leadership and new vision in the areas of the budget, town planning and sewer policy. I advocate the creation of a financial master plan and zoning/development master plan. I advocate the imposition of the same fiscal discipline we all employ in our personal and business lives. I also advocate embarking on a permanent, town-wide wastewater plan to bring about the fundamental fairness talked about so much last year. It has been a distinct honor and privilege to serve the town as a conservation commissioner and I would welcome the opportunity to continue that service as a selectman.

Thomas J. Callahan

Name: Martha Gjesteby
Address: 81 Old Pasture Road
Age: 68
Family: Husband, Arne; and four children, Erik, Ralf, Ingrid and Nils - all Cohasset High graduates.
Education: BS chemistry, Simmons College.
Occupation: Former researcher Harvard Medical School and Dana Farber Center. Present clerk of family business.
Years in town: Since 1961.
Civic/municipal experience: Selectman (nine years, one as chairman); school committee (six years); planning board (two years); capital budget committee (five years); tri-town commission: Metropolitan Planning Council; Old Colony Railroad Mitigation Committee, Cohasset Historical Society; Joint Regional Transportation Committee; Governor's Local Advisory Council; second vice president Mass. Selectman's Assoc.; Community Garden Club.
Reason for seeking office: I have been involved in Cohasset affairs for more than 30 years. During this time, I have gained knowledge and experience on ways to do the town's business, keep the town affordable for all citizens and fund the best public education we can provide. Now, I have the time to be a full-time selectman again and would like to lead Cohasset to the 21st century setting goals, along with strategic planing for the town. I ask you to consider my candidacy for one of your two votes on April 4.

Martha Gjesteby

Name: Rocco F. Laugelle

Years in town: 69.
Civic/municipal experience: Water commissioner (12 years), sewer commissioner (10 years), Norfolk County Advisory (13 years), Selectman (15 years).
Reason for seeking office: I am concerned about the schools, taxes, sewer and water. I feel I have the time to dedicate myself to these issues.

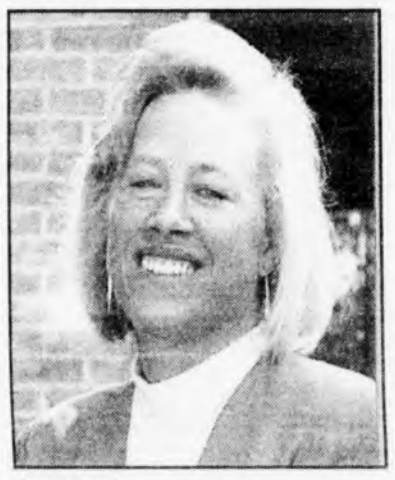
ELECTION GUIDE

School Committee



Name: Mark G. DeGiacomo
Address: 14 Holly Lane
Age: 41
Family: Married to Lynne (Callahan); two children. Jim, 11, (fifth-grader at Deer Hill) and Sam, 8, (second-grader at Osgood)
Education: Cohasset High (1974), BA Boston College (1978), Suffolk University Law School (1981).
Occupation: Attorney at the law firm of Roche, Carens & DeGiacomo, P.C.
Years in town: Lifelong resident of Cohasset.
Civic/municipal experience: member of the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals for 14 years, currently chairman; director, vice president and player agent for Cohasset Little League; coach of over a dozen Cohasset Little League and youth basketball teams; Sunday school teacher.

Mark G. DeGiacomo

Reason for seeking office: As a lifelong resident of Cohasset, I have always believed in the importance of volunteering time and energy to the town. While I have enjoyed my time on the Zoning Board, I would now like to turn my efforts toward ensuring that our children receive the best possible education in our public schools. I believe our schools are at an important crossroad. Over the next year, we will be selecting a new superintendent, opening a new school. Negotiating a new teachers' contract, conducting the initial round of state mandated tests and deciding what action should be taken in connection with the soon to be released facilities audit.

I would like to put my knowledge of the town and its people, my existing working relationship with the Board of Selectmen and Town Manager, and my educational and professional background to work for our schools and our children.

Name: Pat Martin

Occupation: Presently full-time mother. Formerly Head of Martin & Assoc., a consulting firm specializing in needs assessment, strategic planning, program development, grant writing and fund-raising.
Years in town: 1.
Civic/municipal experience: Member of Mercer County FEMA Board; member of both the Mercer County and Somerset County (NJ) Youth Services Commissions; Executive board member of the New Jersey Charter of the National Assoc. of Social Workers; Executive director Princeton Council of Community Services; Campaign advisor on demographics, emerging trends and human service needs; private consultant to 13 towns in central NJ on issues ranging from problem identification to process development; member of the New Jersey Federation of Woman's Clubs, fund-raising chair of Montgomery United Methodist Women.

Reason for seeking office: Many of the issues confronting our schools such as enhanced facility maintenance, desired curriculum additions and necessary material updates could be addressed with financial resources. Yet, we cannot continually tap the tax base. My skills in grant writing, program development and fund-raising can assist Cohasset by identifying and generating new areas of funding outside the tax base. Having worked as a consultant for 12 school systems over the last 15 years, I can also offer valuable information on what I have seen work for other towns with similar concerns. While it may be easy to point out the challenges that are confronting our schools, I have the experience necessary to effectively and efficiently address them and offer proven solutions. My background as a facilitator and community organizer, can also benefit the town in offering a process of cooperation by which all parties interested can feel heard and involved in the system.

Name: Hugh J. Morgan
Age: 53
Address: 24 Bow St.
Family: Two sons, Derek and Chris.
Education: Cohasset High School.
Occupation: Retired supervisor revenue collections MBTA; currently Cohasset schools bus driver.
Years in town: 50.
Civic/municipal experience: US Navy, Vietnam era veteran; St. Anthony's Church; Cohasset Little League; George H. Mealy Post #118 American Legion; Cohasset Elder Affairs volunteer.
Reason for seeking office: I am seeking the office of school committee for many reasons.

Hugh J. Morgan

Namely, every child should have an equal opportunity for a quality education; maintenance of school buildings; transportation; and most importantly, a school budget that gives us maximum mileage out of each taxpayer's dollar.

As we embark into the 21st century, so do the schools. We need our school libraries updated, a playground for our new elementary school, a much-needed maintenance program for all our schools; and fair transportation for all. We must look to the state for additional funding for projects and special needs education.

If elected, I promise to work with the other committee members, town boards and taxpayers to have a first-rate school system and a budget under control.

Vote Saturday April 4th
Polls open at Town Hall 8am-6pm

Sewer Commission

Name: Patrick A. Plante
Address: 798 Jerusalem Road
Age: 64
Family: Wife, Maria; children, Patrick Jr., Paul, Anna, Jacqueline, Jennifer and Peter.
Education: BS Northeastern University; Associate Degree, Wentworth Institute; 60 semester hours, graduate studies Northeastern University and Fitchburg State College.
Occupation: Retired Cohasset High School teacher, licensed construction supervisor, project manager.
Years in town: 40.
Civic/municipal experience: Cohasset Planning Board (9 years); Cohasset Lightkeepers Board of Directors (6 years); Cohasset Housing for Elderly Committee (3 years); Cohasset Osgood School Re-Use Committee; South Shore Assoc. For Retarded Citizens Committee (6 years).

Patrick A. Plante

Reason for seeking office: I decided to run for the office of sewer commissioner when I realized that the North Cohasset bids were so high that the sewer commission was coming back to town meeting to ask for a $2.7 million additional appropriation.

Nine million dollars to sewer 262 homes in North Cohasset is too much money! No one could satisfactorily answer questions as to how and why this occurred, and I felt that the Cohasset taxpayers deserved better than to just "go ahead and get the job done at any cost."

This attitude is not acceptable, especially since we are on the brink of sending out bids for the $13 million plus Central/Hillside project.

The sewer commission has to be accountable to the taxpayers. I feel that my experience makes me qualified to assist the sewer commission in reviewing the contracts. As a board member I would be responsible for establishing and updating a master plan, incorporating all environmentally sensitive areas in Cohasset, including Lily Pond, Little Harbor and Cohasset Harbor.

Name: Henry A. Rattenbury
Address: 1 Briarwood Lane
Age: 61
Family: Wife, Yvette; four sons.
Education: Archbishop Williams HS (1954); attended Newman Prep. School an Northeastern Univ. School of Civil Engineering.
Occupation: Mailman, real estate manager.
Civic/municipal experience: Eight years on the sewer commission; member of the Private Ways Study Committee.

Henry A. Rattenbury

Reason for seeking office: Ever since I served on the first Citizens Sewer Advisory Committee back in 1969, I have been interested in working to resolve Cohasset's wastewater problems. In the mid-1980s, I also served on the second Citizens Sewer Advisory Committee when we recommended the Ward Plan. In 1988, the town approved this and the state approved it, too, but then the state ran out of funding.

Subsequently, I have served three terms on the Sewer Commission while the present sewer program has evolved. I have worked hard on this and we are just about "over the goal line." I am asking the voters of Cohasset to please give me their votes so I can finish the job!

I believe my 11 years as a professional manager combined with my energy and fresh outlook would compliment the many years of experience the existing board already represents. Together we can meet this challenge.

We in Cohasset should expect nothing less than a well-developed and thriving library for young and old alike.

Landfills, sewers, septic systems and also clean water, are all part of the same system of land resource management. To attack this problem piecemeal is to invite expense and litigation that we can't afford. Failure of any part of the system will result in an unhealthy, possibly toxic environment for our town and its inhabitants. We are running out of time to solve these difficult problems. We must structure a unified plan for the whole town which addresses its health needs.

Abutter is angered by Marina vote when it was not on the posted agenda was, at best, a violation of the Open Meeting law, and at worst, yet another example of limiting public input when it serves the board's purpose. I would hope that the board will reconsider its vote and extend the same courtesies to the people effected by this decision that they have to other issues of far less importance. In the meantime, it is my intention to file a complaint with the secretary of state concerning this apparent violation of the Open Meeting law.

No more boats in Bailey's Creek

To the Editor:

In all of this sudden brouhaha over dredging in Bailey's Creek, there's been no mention of safety—the safety of Cohasset's children.

Baileys' Creek empties into Cohasset Harbor between Government Island and Bassings Beach. At low tide, the distance is no more than about 25 yards. It's here that the kids of Cohasset swim back and forth to Bassings. To allow another 50 boats up in Bailey's Creek would further jeopardize their safety. Bailey's Creek is not the place to put a lot more boats.

Bancroft Hall fees are reduced

To the Editor:

The non-profit Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation announces a further reduction of fees for Cohasset residents for private functions: $100 Mondays through Thursdays except holidays, and $200 Fridays, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, effective Jan. 1, 1998. Fees for non-residents remain at $300 and $500.

More than half the bookings are at no charge to non-profit organizations. Fees for private functions have to be charged, in addition to revenues from the second floor apartments, in order to offset the operating costs and provide reasonable set-asides for long-term expenditures such as roof replacement, exterior painting etc.

Bancroft Hall is heavily used and requires considerable maintenance and custodial work, but our patrons have been remarkably respectful of the premises, for which we thank them. Many bookings are made far in advance; to avoid disappointment it is well to reserve early by calling 383-1433.

Coastal Coalition opposes Greenbush with or without tunnel

Members of the Coastal Coalition of the South Shore agreed not to support any settlement with the MBTA that would result in a rail tunnel under Hingham Square. The coalition has fought against the Greenbush project since 1994. The anti-train group has received a groundswell of support on the South Shore for publicizing major facts about the train.

"We oppose Greenbush, whether they design a tunnel or decide to run it at-grade," said Nancy Buckley, co-founder and spokesperson for the coalition.

The MBTA recently increased the projected cost of at-grade construction to $285 million.

Forty members of the Coastal Coalition rallied outside Gov. Cellucci's Hingham fund-raiser on Sunday, March 8. Members challenged Cellucci's current support of the project, given that back in 1990, he campaigned in Hingham and admitted that the train would have serious impacts on Hingham and that alternatives could be developed.

Height variance still needed for second tank

Town Meeting

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The water commission will still need a height variance before it can build the town's second water tank either on Scituate Hill or next to the existing tank on Bear Hill.

Town meeting Saturday gave commissioners the flexibility to spend up to $200,000 more for the $1.4 million second tank but refused to pass a zoning by-law amendment allowing tanks up to 72 feet high on town-owned land or in a district zoned for light industry.

The town limits structures to 35 feet without a variance. Depending on the site, the tank would be about 60 feet tall

Commissioners hoped to get a clear direction from town meeting to move forward with a specific site. That didn't happen and without the zoning by-law change, commissioners may have to opt for Scituate Hill because of neighborhood opposition to the Bear Hill location.

Last year, commissioners withdrew a request for a variance to site the tank at Bear Hill when it appeared the zoning board was leaning toward denying it.

Water Commission Chairman Robert Kasameyer said both locations are adequate from an engineering standpoint. The tanks would both meet insurance standards recommended for fire capacity levels and each has certain regional advantages.

But he stressed that timing is important. The town owns the Bear Hill site but to construct a tank on Scituate Hill would require negotiations with the property's owner or a land taking by eminent domain. Both options would delay the project for at least another year.

Kasameyer said water commissioners had an appraiser look at impacts of a second tank on Bear Hill and learned that there would be no impact on residential values.

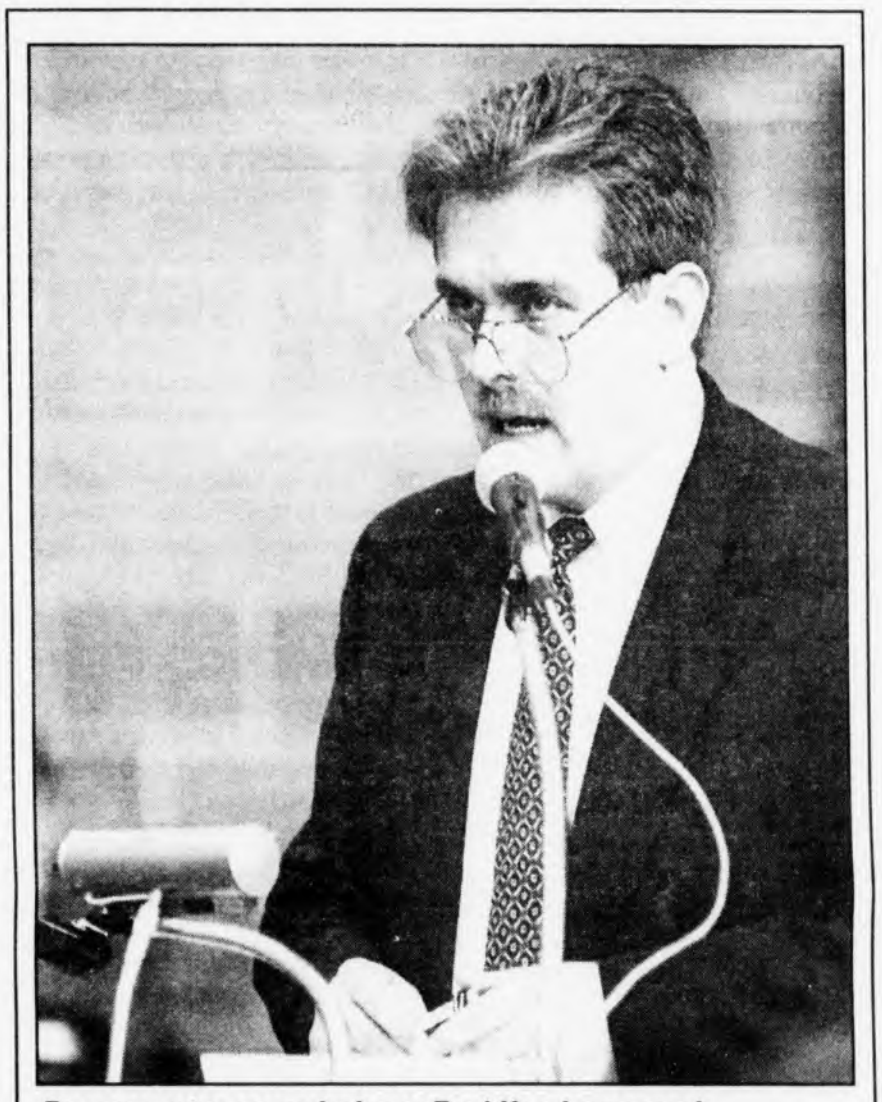
However, abutters to the proposed tank have vehemently opposed having a second tank constructed in their neighborhood.

Kasameyer explained that the cost of putting the tank on Scituate Hill, which is on the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor property off Route 3A across from Atlantic Bagel, is "site dependent."

"We prefer the site on the highest point of land, but that is also preferred by the developer," Kasameyer said.

The owner of the property is now working on a residential subdivision development proposal.

Glenn Pratt of King Street argued against the zoning change.



"It would allow the water commission to by-pass our regulatory proceedings," he said.

Dan Prisble, 60 Jerusalem Road, said he'd like to save the money and backed putting the tank on Bear Hill.

But zoning board chairman Mark DeGiacomo, 15 Holly Lane, likened the amendment to "spot zoning."

"That is wrong," he said. "I'd like to save $200,000, too. But not in order to bulldoze a project through so 30 people have a municipal tank farm in their backyard."

The second tank is needed to increase fire-flow capacity town wide and to enable a tank to be taken off line for periodic cleaning.

Former water commissioner Fred Koed proposed reinstating the hydrant fee at town meeting on Saturday. For story see page 16.

Some Things to Know About Political Advertising

Newspapers reach almost 90% of adults each week. Their heaviest readership is among groups that are most likely to vote. These are the people who are actively involved in and concerned about their communities and the quality of life: professionals, high-income earners, well educated, ages 35-64.

Community Newspaper Company South offers an unparalleled variety of creative options with which to state your political case – page and placement options, large and small space opportunities, continuity, color along with customized slipsheets.

Whether you're a candidate, campaign manager, or media director, we'll help you decide how to best utilize your campaign dollars.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

★ Placement of political advertisements will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis. Guaranteed preferred placement allows the candidate to pick a specific page number, not a specific location on that page. Guaranteed preferred placement will be charged an additional 25% premium. Minimum size for preferred placement is 10 column inches.

★ Pre-payment of all political ads is required, with no exceptions. Cash, check or credit cards are accepted.

★ Deadline for political advertisements is 5 business days prior to publication date. Proofs will be available if submitted at least one week prior to publication.

★ Retail rates apply. Contract rate may apply if the candidate signs a contract and pays in advance the total dollars committed per the agreement.

★ In accordance with Massachusetts laws Chapter 56, Section 39, all political advertisements must be accompanied by a signed authorization statement. Political advertisements must also be accompanied by a Community Newspaper Company indemnification and Limitation of Liability Agreement. Forms are available from your local Community Newspaper Company office. You are welcome to as many as you require.

★ The designation "Political Advertisement" must run above each column of the advertisement.

★ The advertisers/candidates are responsible for the accuracy of the content of material being presented in their advertising, including written permission for the use of photographic likenesses for persons other than the candidate and endorsements.

★ All ads must be submitted in legible handwriting or typewritten form.

★ In the last issue of the newspaper prior to any election, political advertisements in which it is clear that the intent is to deny opponents time for rebuttal will not be accepted. All ads are accepted at the discretion of the publisher.

★ All advertisements must be bordered and use a typeface distinct from the news typeface.

★ All political ads need to include the affiliation of the organization placing the ad, name, title and address (i.e., Citizens to Elect John Doe, Mary Smith, Treasurer, 123 Main St., Weymouth, MA 02190).

Advisory committee adapts to new budget role is a finished document rather than a draft proposal.

"Before, we got the budgets and the town accountant went over it to see if the figures were correct," Whitley said. "Then we would go over each budget and if we didn't understand something, we would have that department head in and quiz him about the items in question. Now, we get the budget completed by Mark Haddad and it is his vision of how the town should operate as a business, and his views on how the town should function."

The advisory committee has not transferred all of its powers to the town manager. The committee still examines the budget, makes recommendations to town meeting and advises on fund transfers from key accounts like the reserve fund. Advisory committee Chairman Roger Whitley said the new budget process has created a few unexpected challenges.

"The biggest problem I've found is that a lot of department heads talk to Mark, but not all the information from those discussions gets to us," Whitley said. "We still make our recommendations to town meeting. Many times in the past, we have had no recommendations because we did not get relevant information on time. This year, that problem was worse because during town meeting we were hearing information we had never heard before."

Despite the difficulties, Whitley said the entire transition of the budget process from the advisory committee and selectmen to Haddad has gone "surprisingly well." Whitley said that he viewed the problems as "first year jitters," because this is the first budget done under the town manager mandate.

Haddad now interviews department heads about their budgets so he can formulate an overall operating budget. Haddad then submits his completed budget to the advisory committee for its input and to answer any questions.

Once the advisory committee gets the budget, it examines the document just as methodically as in past years. Haddad meets with the committee two or three times to discuss costs, answer questions and try to agree on a budget that both can support.

"We had more than 50 items we questioned, and he explained them to us," Whitley said. "If we still had questions, we went back to department heads and asked them if they could live with the recommendations. They all agreed to try, although some added that they may need to return at some point for reserve fund transfers."

Haddad said he is pleased with the way the new budget process is working. He pointed out that there are some benefits for the advisory committee with the new system.

"I develop the budget, submit it to the advisory committee and selectmen, and work with them to develop a consensus," Haddad said. "The completed budget is a better overall presentation for them because they get a completed budget, rather than receiving each department's budget in a piecemeal fashion. It streamlines the process and makes it more efficient."

Haddad added that the advisory committee is still deeply involved in the budget process, and continues to make recommendations to town meeting. Haddad also tries to find common goals with the committee that will ultimately benefit the town.

Haddad said the new process also benefits municipal departments because Haddad examines the budgets individually with each department head, giving them a good opportunity to discuss their needs and goals.

"This is the first year we've done this and it went fabulously," Haddad said.

Hydrant fees to stay in tax base

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The budget was temporarily thrown out of balance Saturday when town meeting decided to pay $106,000 for "hydrant rental fees" out of the general fund.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, with selectmen's approval, had decided the water department, which is running a surplus, could afford to absorb the hydrant fees starting in fiscal year 1999, which begins July 1.

But water commissioners said any surplus should be used to repair and maintain the distribution system. They said they would have to raise rates to make up for the loss of revenue which would result in a "hidden tax," costing the typical homeowner $50 more per year.

Former water commissioner Fred Koed, 92 Pleasant St., said it was an issue of fairness.

Hydrant money is not only used to repair hydrants but to maintain fire-flow capacity in town and is calculated on a per-hydrant basis.

Koed said assessing the town for hydrant fees is the fairest way for the water department to recoup its costs for providing the necessary infrastructure for fire protection.

"When a fire truck connects, it is the highest demand ever," he said. "The system must be overbuilt to accommodate fire flows. The water department must recover these costs."

He explained that by having the hydrant fees in the general fund, the cost for fire capacity is based on assessed valuation of the property to be protected and is spread among all taxpayers. But by transferring the cost to the water department means only water users would pay for fire protection, he said.

Water Commission Chairman Robert Kasameyer said Webb-Norfolk off Route 3A uses no water because it is shut down but it still has a high value associated with it because of the facilities up there. The town must still provide fire service, he said.

He explained under the "new way" of paying through the water rates, Webb-Norfolk would pay nothing for fire protection because it's not using any water. Under the "old way," Webb-Norfolk pays through its real estate taxes.

Saying that's the way government works, Haddad, who as town manager prepares the budget, did not argue against the budget amendment on town meeting floor.

"The process worked and I think it's great," he said.

Haddad said the extra money to pay for the hydrant fees will come from the stabilization fund and free cash.

"The budget is still balanced," he said.

A final biting satire on Mike Tyson and the WWF

Sorry about the headline, folks. There is a new rule in journalism that an oral reference must accompany any story that involves Mike Tyson.

Really, it's the tooth. I swear.

But anyway, Tyson and his new best friends were at the FleetCenter over the weekend for the spectacle that was Wrestlemania XIV. Since I'm a confirmed wrestling fan and probably will never go to a Super Bowl or a World Series game, I figured this might just be my only chance to cover a world-wide sporting event live and in-person. So I jumped at it.

Say what you will about professional wrestling, but right now the sport is white hot. Both the World Wrestling Federation (WWF) and World Championship Wrestling (WCW) are selling out box offices wherever they appear and their respective Monday night live shows draw as many as 4 million viewers each week.

Wrestlemania XIV was no different as almost 20,000 people of all ages, shapes and sizes converged upon the FleetCenter to see whether Tyson, banished for the time being from the boxing ring, had what it takes to make it in the world of wrestling.

For anyone who paid $65 for a seat at the event or $34.95 on pay-per-view to see Tyson work some magic, well, you got royally rooked.

But look on the bright side. At least his match lasted longer than the McNeely fight.

For this evening Tyson was appointed the "special enforcer" referee a the match between the reigning WWF champ Shawn Michaels and his #1 contender, "Stone Cold" Steve Austin.

Tyson, known to his friends as "The Baddest Man on the Planet", had all the personality and life of an oil painting standing at ringside watching Austin battle the disgraced boxer's Degeneration X stablemate for the WWF title.

Everything was going along just ducky in the main event when the referee (darn the luck) got squished between Michaels and a corner turnbuckle, leaving the two grapplers fighting it out without an official.

Young Skippers get ready to hit the field

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Who says you have to be below the Mason-Dixon Line to experience spring training? The Cohasset High baseball team has been enjoying the past week's unseasonably warm weather. Previously confined to the claustrophobic confines of the school's gyms, the rejuvenated ball team burst outside last week with enthusiasm characteristic of baseball in the spring. Under the leadership of coach Bob Knurek, the Skippers are taking aim at the state tournament.

Coach K is in his first year at the helm, after the departure of coach Ron Ford, now the coach of varsity golf. Knurek has hired Sean Donovan as the junior varsity coach. Donovan pitched and played basketball at North Quincy High School and at UMass/Dartmouth and has been an excellent addition to the program. Together, Knurek and Donovan have divided a roster of 22 players into a JV squad and a parent club.

Having graduated three seniors from last year's edition, Cohasset will now have just one senior. Of the 14 players likely to see a fair amount of varsity action, eight are juniors and five are sophomores. Those dynamics would lead some to believe that the Skippers are a year away, but, with 13 years of varsity divided among the juniors, insiders predict that the Boys in Blue should be hitting their stride this year.

Senior captain Pat Hurley, in his fourth varsity season, will start at first base for CHS. Coming off two seasons, football and basketball, in which he also held down the captain position, Hurley should provide excellent leadership for his teammates.

Greg Taylor, a junior, is also in his fourth year on varsity. A pitcher and shortstop who will also see time in center, Taylor is coming off last year's injury-riddled season; a shoulder injury prevented him from throwing even one pitch. Healthier this year, Greg will bat both first and third in the batting order.

Big Al Schwerin will tend the hot corner and probably bat second. With an authoritative, line drive-producing stroke, Al rarely fans and can lay down a bunt when needed. His reliable glove has more than a year of varsity experience at third.

Starting in center for the Skippers will be Ben "Yoda" Ketchum. Yoda's strong arm will also earn him some time on the rubber this year, as he will be the Skippers' second or third starter. Yoda will probably also hit in the third spot this season.

Mike Rossi, the South Section's champion 152-1bs. wrestler, will be limited in playing time this season due to a bum shoulder on his throwing arm. Although this keeps him from throwing for a few weeks, Rossi's bat should come in handy.

In his first varsity season. Denis Rooney will patrol right field for the Skippers. Possessing a cannon arm and a potent bat, Rooney will probably hit somewhere in the middle of the order. Right field is his and the big righty will guard it with Buhner-like intensity.

Jim O'Sullivan, whose on-field performance will no doubt be hindered by his admirably slavish devotion to his word processor, will pitch, play second and probably see some time in the outfield. O'Sullivan will bat in the fifth, sixth or seventh spot for most of the season.

While Rossi rehabs his shoulder, Sean Parkinson will be the starting catcher on varsity. Intense and equipped with a strong throwing arm, Parkinson consistently improves behind the dish from game to game.

Ryan Story, also in his first year on the parent club, will snag some time at first base. The tallest of the Skippers, Story has a live arm and a potentially explosive bat. The big guy will see time in both varsity and JV.

Junior Jared Ford will spend most of his time on JV, but the second baseman will probably be called up to the varsity by the end of the season.

Sophomore Sean Conte saw some innings in the varsity outfield last year and will start in left this season. With a good arm and excellent outfield instincts, Conte could make a big impression this season.

Classmate Joe Pergola is in his third season as a starting pitcher on varsity. If he can keep his arm healthy, Pergola will be Cohasset's number one starter this year and hit in the top or middle of the order.

Like Conte, Chris Pratt also tallied some innings in the outfield in '97. Pratt will probably see time on varsity as both an outfielder and a second baseman this year; the sophomore will swing between JV and varsity.

Danny Mulligan is another versatile Skipper. Mulli will play on both squads this year as well, and play at second, third or behind the plate. With a good arm from the backstop position Mulligan will throw out his share of would-be base thiefs this year.

Southpaw Greg O'Keefe will be a spot reliever in the rotation and could even start if coach Knurek's pitching staff encounters arm troubles like they did last year. O'Keefe will play on both junior varsity and the parent club.

Add to this roster of upperclassmen a strong group of freshmen, and the Cohasset High baseball program is loaded. With three tough games to start the season with, the Boys in Blue have to get to work right away. If the pitching talent can stay healthy and the bats speak up this year, the Skippers may be able to take advantage of their head start on spring and carry that momentum all the way to the state tournament.

I guess the other 20-or-so referees on hand this evening were busy in the back as after Austin hit his signature move (the Stone Cold Stunner) Tyson woke up out of his deep trance to double-cross Michaels and counted the pin.

Tyson then topped off the night with a one punch knock-out of Michaels after the former champion protested the decision a little too much and a little too loudly.

Like I said, if you were interested in this event just for an appearance of Mike Tyson, you got what you deserved. If you took part for three hours of good, solid sports entertainment, you made a good call.

Wrestlemania XIV had a little bit of something for everyone from the high-flying and acrobatic (Taka Michinoku over El Aguila), to the hardcore (Cactus Jack and Chainsaw Charlie over the New Age Outlaws) to the provocative (you haven't lived until you've seen WWF manager Sunny live on a 30-foot high screen).

As for personal highlights there were many, including a nice 20 second conversation I had in an elevator with special guest timekeeper Gennifer Flowers and four of the biggest bodyguards that I have ever seen.

By the way, Genn said she had a wonderful time in Boston and wishes everyone a Happy Easter.

One celebrity who didn't have quite as nice an evening was baseball great Pete Rose, who ended up leaving the FleetCenter on a stretcher after being on the business end of a piledriver from a wrestler who goes by the name of Kane.

Rose, introduced to a loud ovation from the Boston fans, repaid their kindness by calling Red Sox Nation a bunch of losers and some other equally derogatory names before being dropped unceremoniously on his noggin.

Give Pete credit, though, he's got the toughest head of hair in captivity. Even after the piledriver there wasn't a single hair out of place. That's professionalism.

Some may call the whole scenario with Rose a work, but I call it poetic justice. Somebody had to pay for the sins committed in the 1975 World Series. Maybe it should have been Ed Armbrister or Larry Barnett who should have paid this price, but Rose was just as sweet.

The Scituate Rod and Gun Club announces its annual Spring Ham Shoot, to be held from noon to 4:30 p.m., Sunday, April 5. In the event of inclement weather, the shoot will be held Sunday, April 19.

The ham shoot features games of skill and chance focusing on shooting sports. Canned hams are awarded as prizes.

Featured games include:

- skeet — where the object is to hit a fast-moving clay target.
- swinging target — where the most number of shotgun pellets inside a swinging circle wins.
- hanging targets — where the pellet closest to the center wins.
- traditional, muzzleloading rifles — hit an exploding bullseye to win.
- Lucky 22s — highest score with five shots wins (this game is a favorite with young children).
- archery for the children — everyone wins at least a candy bar.

This is an opportunity for area residents to enjoy a day of clean, family fun at the gun club and, maybe, take home the Easter ham.

The Scituate Rod and Gun Club is located on the West side of Route 3A in North Scituate between Henry Turner Bailey Road and Booth Hill Road, opposite mile marker 38. Call (781) 545-1510.

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches

We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

Eagle Scout candidate clears path for award

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Clearing the trails and pathways at the Thayer-Whitney Woods in Cohasset has helped Eagle Scout Scott MacPherson reach an important crossroads that he has been striving for since the fifth grade.

"It's a great accomplishment. Ever since my first year, I've wanted to be an Eagle Scout," said MacPherson, a Cohasset resident. "I went to somebody's Eagle court and I decided that I wanted to be up there some day."

MacPherson, 18, will be "up there" when he receives his Eagle Scout award in recognition of nine years of dedicated service to the community next month. His project involved clearing and widening 12 miles of biking and hiking trails, creating and installing new trail markers and building 10 bird houses throughout the reservation.

"He did a terrific job," said Al Yalenezian, superintendent of South Shore and Cape Cod management of the trustees of reservations. "It's been very beneficial."

MacPherson, who often walks his dog through the public forest, noticed the overgrown trails needed a little sprucing up. He asked Yalenezian if he could lend a hand with a comprehensive clean-up effort.

"It's a beautiful place," MacPherson said. "I'm hoping more people can use it now."

Yalenezian said that with so many large land trust projects on its plate, the trustees' small parks maintenance crew gladly accepts help from local volunteers on these types of projects.

"It's easy for things like trail maintenance to get left out," he said.

MacPherson led a team of scouts equipped with clippers and rakes through the forest for five weekends last winter. While it was easier to clean up the dead leaves at that time of year, MacPherson and his crew did not get to see the fruits of their labor until springtime, when the trees and flowers bloomed.

"It was definitely needed and you can definitely tell a lot of work was done," said MacPherson, who finished the job with the help of 15 fellow scouts last March. "But it's a job that's not finished. It needs to be continually updated."

Yalenezian said the improvements MacPherson's project made will certainly draw more visitors to the park. More than 10,000 people walk through Thayer Whitney Woods each year.

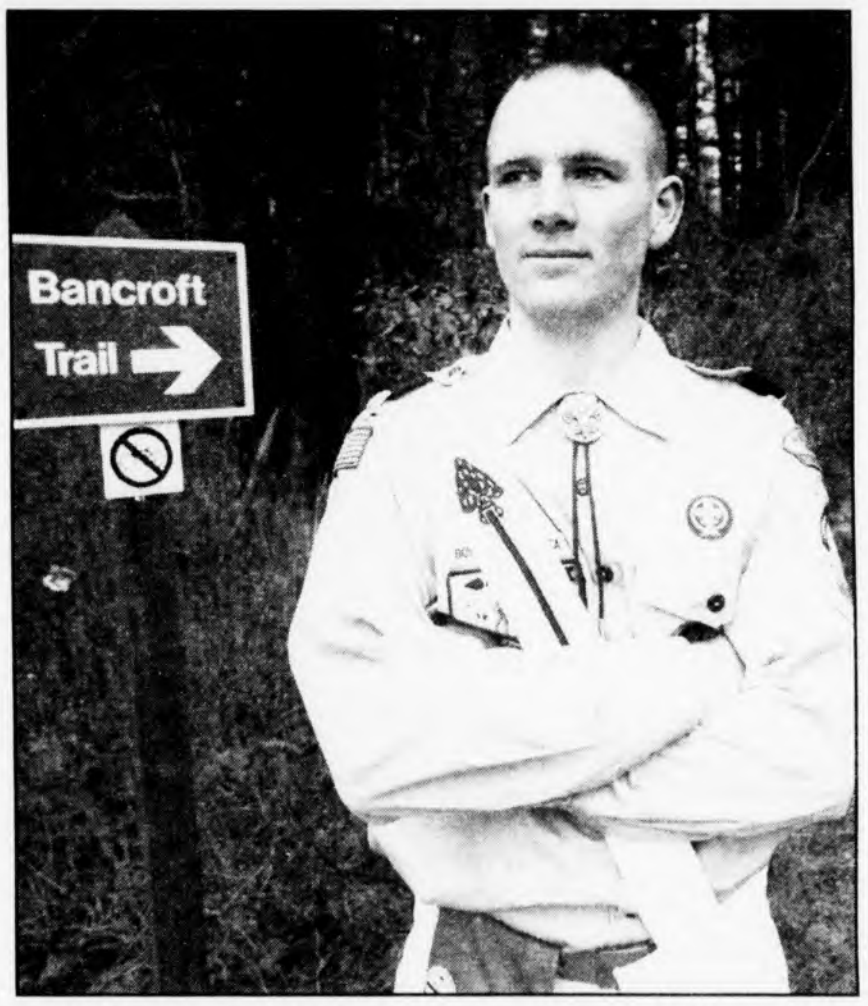
"It makes it much more appealing when the forest is managed and the paths are clean. It's much more inviting," he said.

A senior at Noble and Greenough School in Dedham, MacPherson will be the 76th boy scout from Troop 4 Hingham — where began his scouting career — to rise through the ranks to Eagle Scout. His father, Russell, is an Eagle Scout from the same troop, which has been in existence for more than 70 years.

"Scouts has been a tremendous help in my life. It's shaped the person I am," Scott MacPherson said.

Attaining the rank of Eagle Scout means accepting challenges and responsibilities others may not consider to provide service, he said.

"A lot of people don't understand what it is to be an Eagle Scout. You are a marked man," he said. "You are looked on by your peers and community members as somebody who is going to set an example and act as a leader."



A tri-varsity athlete at school since freshman year, MacPherson said he owes his success on the lacrosse field, the ski trails and cross country running trails to scouting.

"It helped me become a leader on the playing fields," he said. "I also learned dedication — what it takes to get the job done."

In addition to school sports and scouting, MacPherson races with the Waterville Valley Ski Team on weekends and has begun taking flying lessons toward his single engine pilot's license. He plans to attend college and ski next year.

Currently an assistant scout master, MacPherson hopes to continue playing an active role in boy scouts — perhaps some day as a scout master.

"I want to return to scouting what it's given me," he said.

Scott MacPherson cleared paths in Thayer Whitney woods for his Eagle Scout project.

Watercolors at conservatory's staircase gallery

"My work celebrates the diversity of nature through close-ups and landscapes," explains Quincy artist Christine Lashley, whose watercolors are featured in South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery through the end of April.

"While nature is the biggest influence on my work, human pressures on nature are a close second," she says. "Much of my art is created in close proximity to manmade structures or in urban settings. I have painted a tranquil pond next to a factory and an impressive stand of trees at the edge of a hospital's parking lot."

Lashley, a South Sore Art Center artist, received her Bachelor of Fine Arts from Washington University. She also studied in Paris, France at La Sorbonne, Academie de la Grande Chaumiere, and Parsons Art Institute.

Her works have appeared in a number of juried exhibits and hang in private and corproate collections throughout the United States and abroad. In addition to exhibiting in Hingham, Marblehead, Norwell and Manchester, VT this year, her art appears in the March '98 issue of American Artist Magazine.

South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery is free and open to the general public. Gallery hours are 9-5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and 9 to noon, Saturday. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive, Hingham.

For information, call (781) 749-7565, ext. 16.

Talking about divorce: a discussion

The Social Service League of Cohasset is sponsoring a free program, "Talking About Divorce," from 7:30 to 9 p.m., Wednesday, April 8 at the Unitarian Church Parish House, 23 Main St., Cohasset. Leading the discussion will be Judy Osborne, LMFT, LMHC, the author of "Stepfamilies—The Restructuring Process," and director of Stepfamilies Associates in Brookline.

Divorce is not a single legal event, but a psychological chain of relocation, shifting relationships and other changes. It's difficult to parent and to find ways to be your adult self, too. Many issues arise: how to cope with custody and visitation; moving from being an intimate couple to a parenting couple; dealing with anger, guilt, forgiveness; how to establish continued respectful communication; what to do about larger family connections and family events; dating and remarriage, etc. A warm and engaging speaker, Judy Osborne has been invited back by the SSL to discuss the above issues after her October talk on step-parenting was so well received. Admission is free. Pre-registration is suggested. To register or for information, call 383-0771. The Social Service League of Cohasset is a nonprofit agency serving Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

Recreation department annual Easter egg hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the 21st annual Easter egg hunt for children 3 through 11 years old Saturday, April 4, noon, at Deer Hill School Field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter bunny and helpers will be on hand. There also will be live animals at this year's hunt, as well as other attractions. Children will be divided into three separate chronological groups:

Group 1, ages 3 and 4 (with parent); Group 2, ages 5 to 7 and group 3, ages 8 to 11.

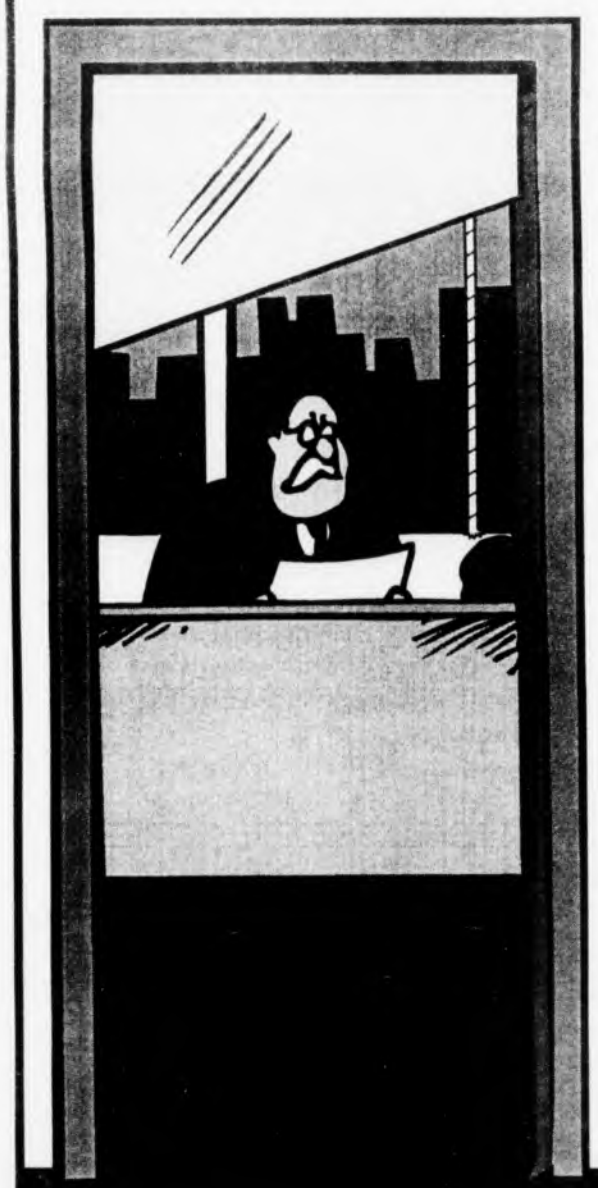
Please enter around your designated area sign before noon. Bring a small paper bag or container for your candy.

Individually-wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape that will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold on to it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are Cohasset Rotary Club, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post 9146, American Legion Post 118, the Cohasset Police Association, & the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Rain date will be Saturday, April 11, noon, at Deer Hill School Field.

Schoolhouse Rock auditions

Hull Performing Arts announces auditions for "Schoolhouse Rock Live!" book by Scott Ferguson, George Keating and Kyle Hall; music and lyrics by Lunn Ahrens, Bob Dorough, Dave Frishberg, Kathy Mandry, George Newall and Tom Yohe. The show will be directed by Lindsay Clinton. Auditions will be held at 7:30 p.m., Monday, April 20 and Tuesday, April 21 at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samosest Ave., Hull. Please bring a prepared piece of music (doesn't have to be from the show). Call (781) 925-2406 for directions and other information.



Social Service League offers scholarship

The Social Service League of Cohasset is accepting applications for a $2,000 scholarship being offered to any Cohasset resident furthering his or her education in the medical or social work fields. Application forms are available from the Social Service League office, 16 Highland Ave., weekdays between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. or in the Cohasset High School guidance office. Seventh Annual Appalachia Yard Sale—April 4

As the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project gears up for its eleventh trip to help upgrade the homes of poor families in Appalachia, they eagerly approach their next fund-raiser: the Seventh Annual ASP Yard Sale. With 84 teenagers, 30 adult and 12 potential college students, the group has reached an all-time high of 126 volunteers who will be traveling to West Virginia from June 27 through July 5.

The yard sale will take place on Voting Day from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, April 4 at the Second Congregational Church, right next door to the polling location (Town Hall). Items—no clothing, please—may be donated by bringing them to the church from Monday, March 30 through Friday, April 3, just prior to the sale. Pick up of heavier items can be arranged by calling us at 383-0345, faxing 383-7005 or E-mailing scc@dreamcom.net. And don't forget to come by and purchase those special treasures you simply must have—and at such a good price!

ASP volunteers are also around to take stock of your orders. Buying a share of stock in Cohasset ASP, at the cost of $20, is a special way to support a specific volunteer as well as the project itself. For each share purchased, further benefits also come your way. Contact the church to buy a share or request a list of the 126 volunteers. Also, watch for us behind the scenes at Cohasset Rotary Club's annual Road Race by the Sea.Constance

Pauline and Mary Keating of Cohasset, volunteers at South Shore Hospital, participated in the seventh annual Hospice of the South Shore Mall Walk recently at the Hanover Mall. The walk raised more than $111,000 to help Hospice provide care and comfort to terminally ill patients and their families.

MBTA doesn't think train will exacerbate flooding

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The federal government has come up with the first phase of funding for the James Brook flood control project. Now that the project is official, it could have a collateral impact on the train that is coming to town. Without doubt, the James Brook situation has proved to be a sticking point in the negotiations between the town and the MBTA. If the T expects to build a track right next to the flood plain,, they will be looking at sections of the Greenbush rail restoration underwater. According to Domenic Tutela, the town's engineer-consultant, water washed out sections of the right of way during the October 1996 storm.. But the T says the federal government's maps do not show the flooding Tutela has seen. They have stuck to their policy of using flood maps supplied by the federal government, even if the town says from experience the maps are wrong.

It rained hard in Cohasset Feb. 25 this year. That Wednesday was the second day and night of rain in a row. Though it did not come down hard and long enough to match the flooding of October 1996, the village streets by the Post Office were submerged. Thomas Gruber took pictures.

Gruber is the Greenbush Mitigation Committee Chairman. That night, he showed the pictures to the engineers from the MBTA. They were at a meeting with the Mitigation Committee formed to deal with the impact the arrival of the train will have on Cohasset. The T wants to put a train track through Cohasset along a right of way that has gone underwater in severe storms. For almost a year, town officials have expressed doubts about the impact the train, the Greenbush restoration, will have on the town's efforts to fix the flooding.

Robert Egan, the T's engineer, looked at Gruber's pictures briefly. A few minutes later he repeated the theme he has sounded since talks between the T and the town began. Egan is not convinced the train will make Cohasset's flooding woes any worse than they are already. He also implied the burden of proof fell on the town, not on the T.

"The ball is basically in the town's court," Egan said. He said the T based its predictions on flood maps supplied by the federal government's emergency management agency. If the maps are wrong, the T is not prepared to make adjustments.

"We're in no position to change the FEMA document," Egan said.

But Gruber and the rest of the committee and former selectman Peter Pratt did not give up. After more than an hour of talking with Egan and with engineers from the T's consulting firm Sverdrup, Gruber's panel wrung an agreement out of the T. If the town's engineer Domenic Tutela would survey all the culverts in the area from the center of the town down to the James Brook and provide a map, the T would do the calculations that would prove the train would not have an impact on Cohasset's flooding.

Or not prove it.

The deal was written up in a mission statement at the end of the meeting. The statement was the brainstorm of selectwoman Nan Roth. She previously observed the T and the tow[illegible] away from past meeting[illegible] ing different things." Ro[illegible] gested putting the outcomes of meetings on paper might dispel some of the misunderstandings.

In a way, it worked. Though the T did not come across with its side of the bargain, there is no longer any misunderstanding. Gruber sees a wider pattern in the T's failure to crunch the numbers. A year after they started talks with the town, the T has set a pattern of breaking promises.

"They say they're going to do one thing. Then they go someplace else," Gruber said. His committee is keeping a list. But a year into their mission, they are beginning to realize they are in a tug of war with the T over Greenbush. Their top priority, the James Brook flood plain, has been one of the sticking points. But the truth is, the T has failed to resolve a single issue the town has brought up. Three examples tell the story.

On James Brook: Tutela came up with his end of the bargain and hand-delivered the results to Sverdrup six days after the meeting. The T promised to have the calculations ready in two weeks. Last week, Gruber got a letter without the calculations. The T now is suggesting a face-to-face meeting to "explain something."

On the North Main Street Dropoff: Egan told the panel at the close of the Feb. 25 meeting he had good news about one thorny issue. The T had dropped its idea about a pedestrian dropoff along North Main Street because town officials considered the dropoff unsafe. Egan said the town had been sent a letter with the T's decision. But Gruber said the letter actually did not say anything of the sort.

"It was so full of caveats and legal language. All they did was raise liability issues. It doesn't say anything about the dropoff issue." He confronted Pam Wolfe, the T's community liason. She promised a better letter would be on the way. But it has never arrived.

On the Private Way Closings: The T told the Mitigation Committee it was ready to wind up the issues about private ways. But then Egan said the T would talk to "individual" homeowners, not deal with people as a group. Since the T lacks the legal authority to contact residents until the environmental impact report is state-approved, the matter is on hold.

Gruber said part of the town's dilemma was the character of the project. The train will make a difference for the whole town in some ways, but it will also have a special impact on people who live close by the tracks. Some of those issues may disturb only one homeowner. But resolving them is still part of the Mitigation Committee's charge. They still will try to strike the best deal for the town.

"The committee is very dedicated," he said.

DeGiacomo, Martin win school seats

Brown, Callahan top selectmen's race

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The only prediction Robert V. Davenport would offer as the polls closed Saturday evening was who the top vote-getter would be.

The political watchdog and former health board member, who rarely misses a selectman's meeting, was right. Mark G. DeGiacomo — lawyer, Little League coach and long-time member of the Zoning Board of Appeals — walked away with 1,719 votes and a spot on the school committee which included a three-way race for two open seats. His nearest rival for sheer number of votes was Robert Kasameyer, 17 Pond St., who ran unopposed for reelection to the water commission and got 1,607 votes.

But the other races were up in the air as far as Davenport and most who local election watchers were concerned.

When Town Moderator George Marlette read the results to a crowd of about 75 who had gathered at town hall — simultaneous gasps of relief and sighs of disappointment reverberated throughout the auditorium.

As the dust settled, the town opted for a brand-new selectman, Tom Callahan, who serves on the conservation commission, and gave incumbent Merle Brown another term.

Just slightly more than 200 votes separated the top four selectman candidates, who also included former selectmen Martha Gjesteby and Rocco Laugelle. William Ross, 16

Red Lion gets unofficial OK

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The Red Lion Inn's new construction team squeezed a "conditional" approval April 1 from the planning board. But the unofficial OK probably will be "moot" by the board's upcoming April 15 meeting, Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said Wednesday. He said the board drafted a "conditional approval" letter but did not send it yet.

"There's no mystery that we're going to approve it," said Moore. "But we're not going to roll over and play dead either." He said the planning board would not back off the usual requirements to get the high-profile project going.

Construction manager Tish Gardner, of Shawmut Construction, won the concession after she stressed the urgency of the construction season schedule. Before she would give the order to begin demolition of part of the structure, which does not require a permit, she wanted a guarantee the planning board would not block the new construction. Moore said Wednesday he doubted the project was at any risk. Since the inn and restaurant was "an existing use," the construction crews could get to work on much of the project without planning board approval. But earlier Gardner cited other developers who ripped down existing structures only to learn later they could not build up again. She stood firm on her demand to see "something in writing" from the board.

"We do need to get some stuff going," she said.

Over the objections of planning board member Robert Sturdy, they negotiated the unofficial OK, pending the delivery of stamped architectural drawings and exterior elevations. Sturdy abstained from the "conditional" vote but did

Harbor committee hears marina's expansion plans

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A local businessman says his marina operation will sink unless the town supports realigning the federal anchorage area so he is able to move his docks about 40 feet into Bailey's Creek.

Paul Trendowicz — who owns Cohasset Harbor Marina off Parker Avenue — took his case to the harbor committee last week to seek support for his proposal which he says will ultimately benefit the town.

But hanging in the balance is the town's $1.34 million harbor dredging project slated to begin in September.

The harbor committee — which

Several sewer options on table

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Town meeting is over and the dust has settled on the North Cohasset sewer project. Town officials are now stuck with the aftermath of the decision by voters not to approve an additional $2.7 million for the project because of higher than expected bids.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would meet with sewer commissioners at Monday night's selectmen's meeting to discuss the town's next step for the North Cohasset project.

"This is still very much up in the air," Haddad said. "Contract one has been approved, the bids have been awarded, and the pipe will be laid. But other than that, everything else will be on the table during Monday's discussion. There is enough money for

Tax breakdown in bills

Thanks to Concerned Cohasset taxpayers, property owners will get a clearer picture of where their tax dollars are going.

Town meeting approved an amendment to the general by-laws that requires the treasurer-collector enclose with each real estate bill an explanation of the breakdown of the total tax rate for the town.

The explanation will include the total rate of education, public safety and general government costs including all employee benefit and debt costs.

Although the majority of advisory committee said it was unnecessary to enact a by-law to accomplish this, Lenora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, successfully argued the by-law was necessary to ensure the breakdown is included.

Alex Koines, 380 Atlantic Ave., a member of the taxpayer group and who also sits on the advisory committee, backed Jenkins.

"An informed taxpayer is a better taxpayer and better citizen," he said.

$100K approved to pull up moorings

Town meeting last week approved appropriating $100,000 for the removal and reinstallation of the moorings in Cohasset Harbor. The money will be used to pay a contractor to pull up moorings when the harbor dredging project gets underway in September and put them back after the job is finished.

The money will be borrowed but the debt service will be offset by paying it back through the town's waterways account funded by boat exise taxes, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Water contract extension ok'ed

Town meeting last week unanimously approved authorizing the water commissioners to award a contract this fiscal year with a special clause allowing them to extend the contract beyond the three-year term. For the past three years, management of the water department has been contracted out to Cohasset Water Services, a private company.

Water commissioner John McNabb explained this allows water commissioners the option of extending the contract for operation and maintenance of the facilities for one or more additional terms because it might be advantageous to stay with current contracted services.

The water commission has released a new request for proposal with responses due back April 20. The current three-year contract cannot be extended because there was no prior town meeting vote like this, McNabb said.

"This gives us the option when the contract is signed by either Cohasset Water Services or whoever the successful bidder is to allow (the contract) to continue for another three-year term," he said.

Cohasset Water Services is the private contractor currently managing the water department.

Recall petition is defeated

A citizens' petition calling for special legislation to allow Cohasset to hold recall elections failed at town meeting.

William B. Smith, 400 Atlantic Ave., argued that elected officials should be held responsible.

"It's important voters retain the right to make a mid-course correction," he said.

Smith tried to assure town meeting that the power to recall would not be abused. He noted that Hull has had a recall provision since 1980 and has only used it once.

But Dan Evans of the advisory board said the regular electoral process is effective and the town would be held hostage and forced to go to considerable expense to hold special elections under the proposed law.

"This has a negative tone to it, it's unhealthy," Evans said.

Cedar lanes remain private ways

With a vote of 30-103, town meeting turned down an article to ask Norfolk County to prepare plans so Cedar Acres Lane and Cedar Acres Drive could be accepted as public ways. The article also asked for $10,000 for the town manager to spend on the plans if the county said no to the request.

The issue of private versus public ways has been festering in town for some time. Selectmen appointed a private ways committee about two years ago to tackle the job of prioritizing the town's private ways so the town could start accepting the ones needing the least work as public ways.

Laura Doherty, 36 Cedar Acres Lane, is tired of waiting.

The sponsor of the article said she and her husband, John, pay the same taxes as other residents but don't get the same services. She said the street is plowed but hasn't been paved in 25 years.

She urged town meeting to approve the request out of a sense of fairness.

But Ross Rosano, 21 Rocky Lane, chairman of the private ways committee, said the town should wait until a town plan is developed.

He said it will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to bring all the town's 79 private ways up to standard. Rosano said the state provides only $2,000 in additional Chapter 90 highways funds for each mile of public ways.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy warned that public ways can come with a different kind of price.

He said that dead-end streets can become through-ways and provide frontage for purposes of a subdivision.

"Maybe we should consider changing the town standard for what it does on private ways without going around making every private way a public way," he said.

The town has spent about $22,000 out of the $50,000 town meeting set aside last year to repair private ways.

Joseph McElroy, 59 Windy Hill Road, said he was disappointed with the slow progress on the private ways plan and wanted assurances that the money town meeting put aside would be spent on upkeep of private ways as promised. He also urged that subsequent town meetings be provided with an update on private ways.

"It's easy to put this on the back burner," he said.

What makes our bagels the best?
We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches
We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

Church St., came in a distant fifth with 74 votes.

Forty-four percent of the town's 5,400 voters went to the polls.

Newcomer Patricia Martin, 169 Linden Drive, whose expertise includes grant writing and fund-raising, held back tears when she heard she'd won a seat on the school committee.

Martin said although she was helped by a growing minority in town consisting of those who have lived in Cohasset less than five years, she was gratified her support was more broad-based.

"I'm glad to see people willing to take a chance on me because of my background. I'm thrilled and ready to get in there and work," she said.

Hugh Morgan, 24 Bow St., a school bus driver, was very discouraged with losing a second consecutive bid for a school committee seat.

"I'm glad to see people willing to take a chance on me because of my background. I'm thrilled and ready to get in there and work."

PAT MARTIN, SCHOOL COMMITTEE

"It's all done. The people have spoken," he said.

DeGiacomo, 17 Holly Lane, said he was looking forward to his new role.

"I'll be the rookie," he said. "I want to listen. I've got some things to learn and want to continue the task of providing the best education possible for our children."

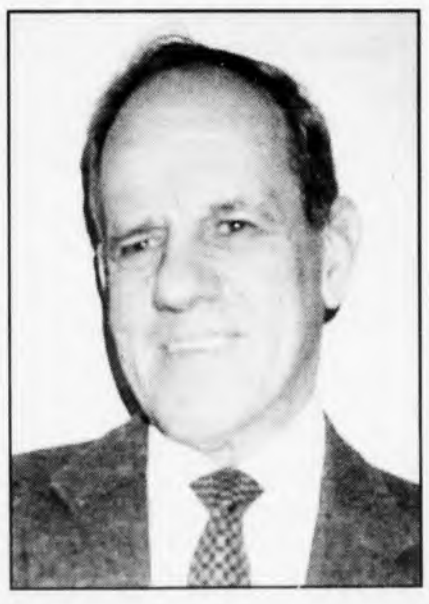
The hottest race was for sewer commission, as a vocal citizens' group tried but failed to unseat incumbent Henry Rattenbury, 17 Briarwood Lane. Only 17 votes separated Rattenbury and Patrick Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road. Plante was backed by Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES) which is opposed to the current sewer plan.

"It was a close race. Pat worked very hard," said Rattenbury, a local letter carrier.

Regarding the controversy surrounding the cost of the $9 million north Cohasset sewer project, Rattenbury said it was time to go back and look at the situation to see what can be done to solve the problem.

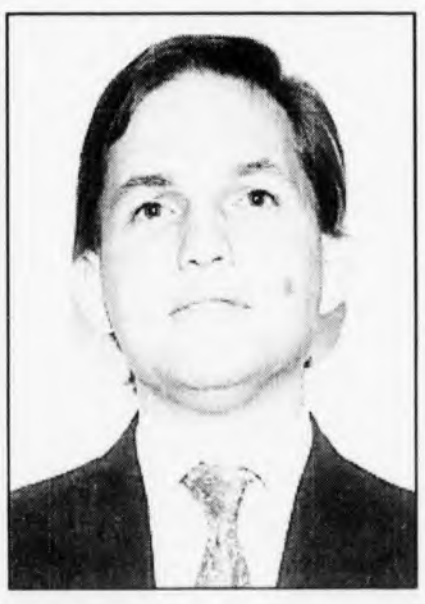
Callahan, the new selectman, was almost speechless when he heard the results.

"It was a lot of hard work at the end," he said about the campaign. "I'm glad my message seemed to reach a lot of people."



Before the results were ready, Brown, the incumbent selectman, sat quietly on the sidelines.

He said it was a hard campaign with four well-known people running for selectman.



One person in the hall was clearly delighted — not necessarily with the election results — but with the way the overall election went. The town's new optical scanning voting machines passed the test with flying colors. With votes tallied and checked by just after 7 p.m. (the polls closed at 6 p.m.), the long hours spent going over voting cards in past years seemed like a distant memory.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas hasn't looked back since replacing the old punch-card machines last year.

"I love it!" she said about the new system.

Septic systems carry a heavy stigma

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

It is no longer possible to discuss septic systems in Massachusetts without encountering some of the hysteria created by Title V regulations. Title V forces home sellers to have extensive septic system inspections and repair or replace broken components within two years. Stories of expensive septic repairs have taken on almost mythic qualities. Everyone seems to have heard about a failed system somewhere that cost more than $80,000 to repair.

But amid all the hysteria is an unexpected truth: under the right circumstances, septic systems are an environmentally sound alternative to sewers and a lot cheaper than quarterly sewer assessments. A well-maintained septic system can cost less than $100 per year, whereas sewer assessments can cost hundreds of dollars per quarter.

Environmental experts, health professionals, even sewer commissioners agree septic systems are safe and cheap on property with the right kinds of soils and landscape. Another advantage to septic systems is that water filtered through a leaching field is returned to the ground, preserving the watershed. Some communities have had problems with groundwater pipes out of sewer pipes into MWRA sewers, draining groundwater away from the local watershed and into Boston Harbor.

"On-site wastewater systems work well if you have the right kind of soil — a sandy, porous loam that drains well — with the right kind of microbial population living in the soil to detoxify the sewage," said health board member Kevin Ulmer.

And that's where the problems for septic tanks in Cohasset begin. Septic systems function best in absorbent soils that are not close to ground water flows. But Cohasset is mostly rocky terrain and ledge sitting close to groundwater. Even the town's name betrays its adversity to well-functioning septic systems; the word Cohasset is derived from the Native American word, "Konnohasset," which means "long rocky place."

Ulmer points to the recent case of four homes in the Newtonville area that had what he refers to as "cesspools sitting on ledge." Sludge from the cesspools was percolating to the surface, creating a clear public health risk.

Ulmer points out that septic systems must be maintained properly. Pouring paint thinner down a drain into a septic system is a fast way to destroy its components and contaminate soils.

Another problem area for septic systems is Little Harbor, the subject of a study to determine if septic systems are contaminating the ocean floor with nitrogen, a common nutrient that can cause algae beds to grow out of control. Septic systems do not filter out nitrogen, and it's possible that every septic system in the Little Harbor area is functioning perfectly. Yet those systems will have to be replaced, possibly with sewer pipes, if septic systems are the source of nitrogen contamination in Little Harbor.

It is this very rocky seacoast feature of the terrain that makes Cohasset a great choice for a beautiful home and a potentially poor choice for a septic system. And if its impossible to talk about septic systems without talking about Title V, it's equally impossible to talk about Title V without talking about its impact on real estate.

Title V changed way septic systems are looked at

Gail Bell is a past president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors. She said Title V has forced real estate agents into becoming septic experts and engineers. Bell said Title V is expensive for homeowners, delays sales closings, and sometimes proves a hardship to home-sellers on fixed incomes who can't complete the sale of their home without coming up with $20,000 that they don't have for a septic system repair.

"People from the city or Midwest where sewers are the norm absolutely fear septic systems," Bell said. "Title V has had a tremendous impact on the South Shore. We're muddling through and at least everyone understands the process and timeline."

Despite fears and a lack of knowledge, Bell said homes with septic system still sell as long as the on-site system is in good condition.

"All home-buyers care about is having a good wastewater disposal system that's not too expensive," Bell said. "Sewer can be very expensive in some cases."

Perhaps the most unlikely advocate for septic systems is Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild. Guild installed a new septic system at his home in 1988 and has been quite happy with its performance.

"Septic is a lot cheaper than sewer," Guild said. "If you've got a gravity system, it costs about $180 every two years to pump the tank, and that's it for cost. Sewer ain't cheap, and the things that make septic expensive in Cohasset, like ledge and blasting, are the same things that make sewer expensive. Everyone talks about $70,000 septic repairs, but the average cost in Cohasset has been $20,000."

In contrast to the average septic cost, the price to sewer North Cohasset is $35,000 per person. The actual cost to homeowners is lower because the town has approved 50-50 funding for part of the project and low-interest state loans are available to homeowners to connect to the system, Guild said.

Septic systems can work well and efficiently if you've got the right location, Guild said. The problem in Cohasset is that there are few suitable locations for on-site systems.

"Cohasset's just not the greatest place in the world for septic systems," Ulmer said.

Several sewer options are on the table contract two. We will discuss going back out to bid, scrapping the project, holding a special town meeting and anything else that comes up."

The sewer commission is planning to meet tonight to discuss recommendations for Monday night's meeting with selectmen.

"Contract one has been awarded and is proceeding, and although the funds are there for contract two, the town has to decide how to proceed," Guild said. "Contract two has to be done, and contracts three and four will be done because we have to comply with the Second Amended Final Agreement for Judgment. Contracts three and four need funding, and we think we can get people to support it once they understand it won't impact the tax base."

It is possible to obtain state funding to help residents pay lower interest rates on loans for sewer connections, Guild said. The town would not have to pay any of those costs.

Guild said there are two ways the town can proceed with another request to fund the $2.7 million for contracts three and four: voters can support a plan to pay 50 percent of the fee to hook into the main through the tax base, or voters can approve the project with homeowners paying the full connection fee.

"After the town meeting vote last Saturday, I'm certain you'll never get the town to fund 50 percent of the $2.7 million and as far as I'm concerned, it's a dead issue," Guild said. "I'm sure a group of people in North Cohasset would like to receive 50 percent funding through the tax base, but they will have to be more vocal and submit their own article."

Guild said that at the very least, everyone in the North Cohasset project is guaranteed 50 percent funding through the tax base for the sewer main. And residents around Strait's Pond may receive 50 percent funding for sewer connections through contract two. But all other homes in the North Cohasset project may have to pay the full cost to connect to the main, at an average price of $15,000 per home.

"The sewer commissioners may submit an article at least getting low interest state funding to complete the project," Guild said.

not go on the record against it. He said earlier he backs the restoration which could bring the luster back to the village and ultimately set the standard for other projects. The 1704 inn is said to be one of the most significant historic buildings in town. Sturdy previously said much hinges on the project's success for the whole town. But he has also been the most critical voice on the panel during months of haggling over incomplete drawings and sketches. Earlier he said the project cannot win approval until the plan documents meet the requirements. Last week, with time running out, he acknowledged the "conditional" rubber stamp might be a necessity at this juncture.

Wednesday, work on the project had not yet started. The restoration of the South Main Street hotel was supposed to begin this spring, but problems with the plan and the design tied up the building permit. Though not controversial with the neighbors or the general public, the incomplete state of the plan drawings has rankled town officials. Moreover, while the construction season slipped by, time all but ran out for the planning board to finish its review.

> "There's no mystery that we're going to approve it."
> PLANNING BOARD CHAIRMAN AL MOORE.

The review deadline exists to protect property owners, so the board acts promptly on an application for a site plan. Technically, the board has until April 15 to render a final decision. But with the deadline looming, Gardner informed the board the delivery of the final drawings could be as much as six to eight weeks away.

Wednesday, Moore said the picture had changed, and now it looked likely the missing drawings would be delivered by April 15. He said he expected the board would take the final vote then.

The board still holds the option to rule against the plan to restore the building. Moore said the board would not rubber stamp any of the plans until it was satisfied it had satisfactory answers to its questions. But Moore said the new Red Lion team made good progress in a couple of weeks.

After weeks of haggling over the incomplete state of the drawings with owner Gerd Ordelheide and architect, Ordelheide fired the architect and brought in Gardner and a new architect Peter Niemintz of Boston. Gardner April 1 expressed confidence about the project, though she acknowledged one setback. The design review board earlier questioned the height of the new roof and indicated a variance will be needed. The existing roof is flat, but a peaked roof, which the planning board urged Ordelheide to build, will put the height of the Red Lion Inn above the limitation.

"Right now, we're going with a flat roof," she said. Gardner also provided a display of the building materials mounted on a card. The new Red Lion Inn will have wood siding. (The aluminum siding will be ripped off.) It will be painted taupe with white trim and forest green doors. But the sign will stay red. About 3,800 square feet of the existing structure is being torn down. The new addition measures 7,000 square feet. The whole project adds about 3,500 square feet to the Red Lion footprint, expanding it to about 12,000 square feet.

Office complex for Rt. 3A before planning board

The regret over zoning along Route 3A came up April 2 when Paul Barry brought his plan for a small office complex and auto repair before the planning board. The complex is slated for a site on Route 3A now occupied by a golf driving range. Planning board Chairman Al Moore said earlier the new buildings probably signaled an improvement for the stretch of road near the Hingham line. But he and other members of the board also said the site review meant an opportunity to help Route 3A's sagging image.

"People are constantly calling me up and telling me how bad Route 3A looks," Moore said. He suggested the engineer could move the buildings back by five or 10 feet to pick up more green space. He also said he hoped the "stone hall" for the detention pond would not be visible from the road.

Also, planning board member Robert Sturdy asked for extra screening around the auto repair building. Sturdy also said he wished the two small office building could be combined into one larger structure. Route 3A "already has lots of little buildings," he said.

"It makes it look junky," Sturdy said.

Engineer Steven Gioiosa of SITEC went along with Moore's idea. He said one of the buildings could be pushed farther away from the road. But Sturdy's hope to consolidate the buildings was dashed when Barry said he went with three small buildings because he wanted to keep open the option of selling to three different buyers. He said he already had reached a verbal agreement to sell the auto repair to William Cavanaro, the owner of Cohasset Collision. Cavanaro also attended the session and said he was willing to adopt the board's suggestions about screening and about a facade for the building. It will probably be a steel building, Barry said.

More suggestions about the landscaping and the grading came from John Modzelewski, the town's engineering consultant. The plan will be back before the board for discussion.

NEW BABY GIRL ARRIVES

Dr. David Demick is certainly renowned as one of the best anesthesiologists in the area, now he has an even bigger claim to fame! He and his wife Ann are the proud parents of a bouncing baby girl, Carol Elizabeth Demick! We do mean bouncing, folks, Carol weighed 10 pounds at birth, and was 22 inches long! She was born Tuesday, March 24. Carol joins her 2-year-old brother, John (you can bet that David and Ann are a busy set of parents!), who we are sure loves to help Mom with the baby! Her maternal grandparents are John and Eileen Shea of Bonita Springs, Fla., and Eleanor Shea of Pittsfield. Her paternal grandparent is Dorothy Demick of Pittsfield. We congratulate all of you!

NICE NOTE FROM POLLY

Had a nice note from Polly Doggett recently; at a homemaking meeting at the Mormon Church in Hingham, she presented a demonstration on keeping your man healthy and happy with heart-smart cooking. The scene was set with flowers and candle light as Polly proceeded to prepare two healthful dinners using baked scrod in one and stir-fry wheat in the other. She chose dishes with low-fat, low-salt and plenty of color. Even experienced cooks were surprised at how appealing the fish was, while others had never tried her combo of whipped potatoes and carrots. Fish sprayed with lemon juice "makes all the difference," Polly explained, and don't forget a topping of Ritz crackers and melted butter. The LDS Church has long encouraged its members to keep on hand a supply of whole wheat berry. And, after the second demo, many women were pleased that they now knew how to use their whole wheat. Polly told them to steam a cup or so of whole wheat much like rice, then she has it on hand for various uses. Sometimes she serves it for breakfast, other times she prepares a stir-fry dish with sautéed veggies (she can make it Italian with some ketchup, Soy sauce for Chinese flavor or corn chips and Taco sauce to make it Mexican). The more veggies, the better, she says! Cut-up cooked meats or poultry are also nice, but not necessary. When Polly's 19-year-old-son, Dana, was serving a mission for the LDS Church in Central America, he wrote home that his mother's stir-fry cooking had prepared him for enjoying the foods down there. Polly says, "These dishes are nutritious and delicious. If you'd like me to share more of my 'secrets,' don't hesitate to call at 383-1847."

CONGO CAPERS IS BUZZING

Things sure are buzzing on Highland Avenue! Why, you ask? Well, the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset is again planning to present its family variety show and fund-raiser, Congo Capers. The cast of church parishioners, led by JoJo Fichtner, director and choreographer, and Bob Leavitt, musical director, have been preparing since early February for this fun and popular event. The two-hour Congo Capers program presents song and dance numbers from some favorite musicals such as "Cats,", "Les Miserables," "Chicago," "Sunset Boulevard," "City of Angels," and many more. Tickets for assigned seats are $7 at the door and are also available in advance from cast members or at the church office. Proceeds from ticket sales will go to benefit the Second Congregational Church organ fund and other local charitable efforts. When does this take place, you ask? Friday and Saturday, May 8 and 9, at 8 p.m. It will be at the Cohasset Junior/Senior High School auditorium. Do yourselves a huge favor and make plans now! Tickets go fast, and the show is the talk of the town for weeks after its over! In fact, the last show was so good, people wanted it to appear on the stage at the South Shore Music Circus!

HEARD FROM HUSTONS

Guess who we heard from last week? Gail and Bud Huston! They were Cohasset residents for years, and now live in Peachtree City, Ga. Anyway, they are planning a memorial service for Gail's great-aunt Marion at the end of April, and they will be up here for it. They hope to arrive around April 23. For all of their friends, it will be such a delight to see them, we cannot wait!

FEOLA SAYS HELLO

Speaking of names out of the past, former Police Chief Randy Feola called Clark from his home in Florida last week. Does it seem possible that he has been retired from the CPD for 18 years? Anyway, he reports that all is well down there, and wishes to be remembered to his pals! Now, HE is a LEGEND!

ASP HAS TWO SPACES LEFT

The Appalachia Service Project has only two more spaces available to go on their project in Virginia this year! They already have 124 volunteers, and are looking for two more adults over 25. They are also starting a waiting list in case there are some who cannot make the trip — if you are interested, please call Gary Ritts or Pam DeLorenzo!

PLANNING AHEAD

Have any news? Remember, your news is our news, so kindly give me a buzz! Oh, here is a note you might want to remember — I type my column the Thursday night before it comes to print — in other words, I am a week ahead. So, plan to let me know any dated items a week before you would like to see them in print! Thanks!

OSGOOD BIRTHDAY COMMITTEE

The Osgood Birthday Celebration Committee needs you! Or, more correctly, your picture. As reported before, they are going to have a tent full of pictures celebrating all of the students who graduated from there. Rose Collins is even planning a family tree (for those who had more than one graduate from Osgood). Time is running out, as planning it all is crucial. If you have pictures (any you can find), put your name and date on the back, then drop it off at the Osgood School.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Responsible pet owners

It's spring, season of new life. It can also be the season of death and disease among animals, both wild and domestic.

Every three to five years rabies runs rampant among wildlife and there's relatively little scientists can do to prevent it. This year seems to be one of those peak years. Already, state public health officials are saying confirmed cases are up 40 to 50 percent over last year's rate. So far, Cohasset's animal world is leading a charmed life. According to Dr. Joseph Godzik of the health department, there have been no reported cases and no animals have been sent for testing. That charmed life could end soon — Scituate has had two confirmed cases of rabid raccoon and the three confirmed cases, two skunks and a raccoon, have been reported in Hingham.

The woods are also full of throwaway cats and their feral offspring.. The statistics are overwhelming. Each one of them is vulnerable to rabies and a host of other diseases like feline leukemia, feline AIDS and distemper, diseases they can spread to any household pet they encounter.

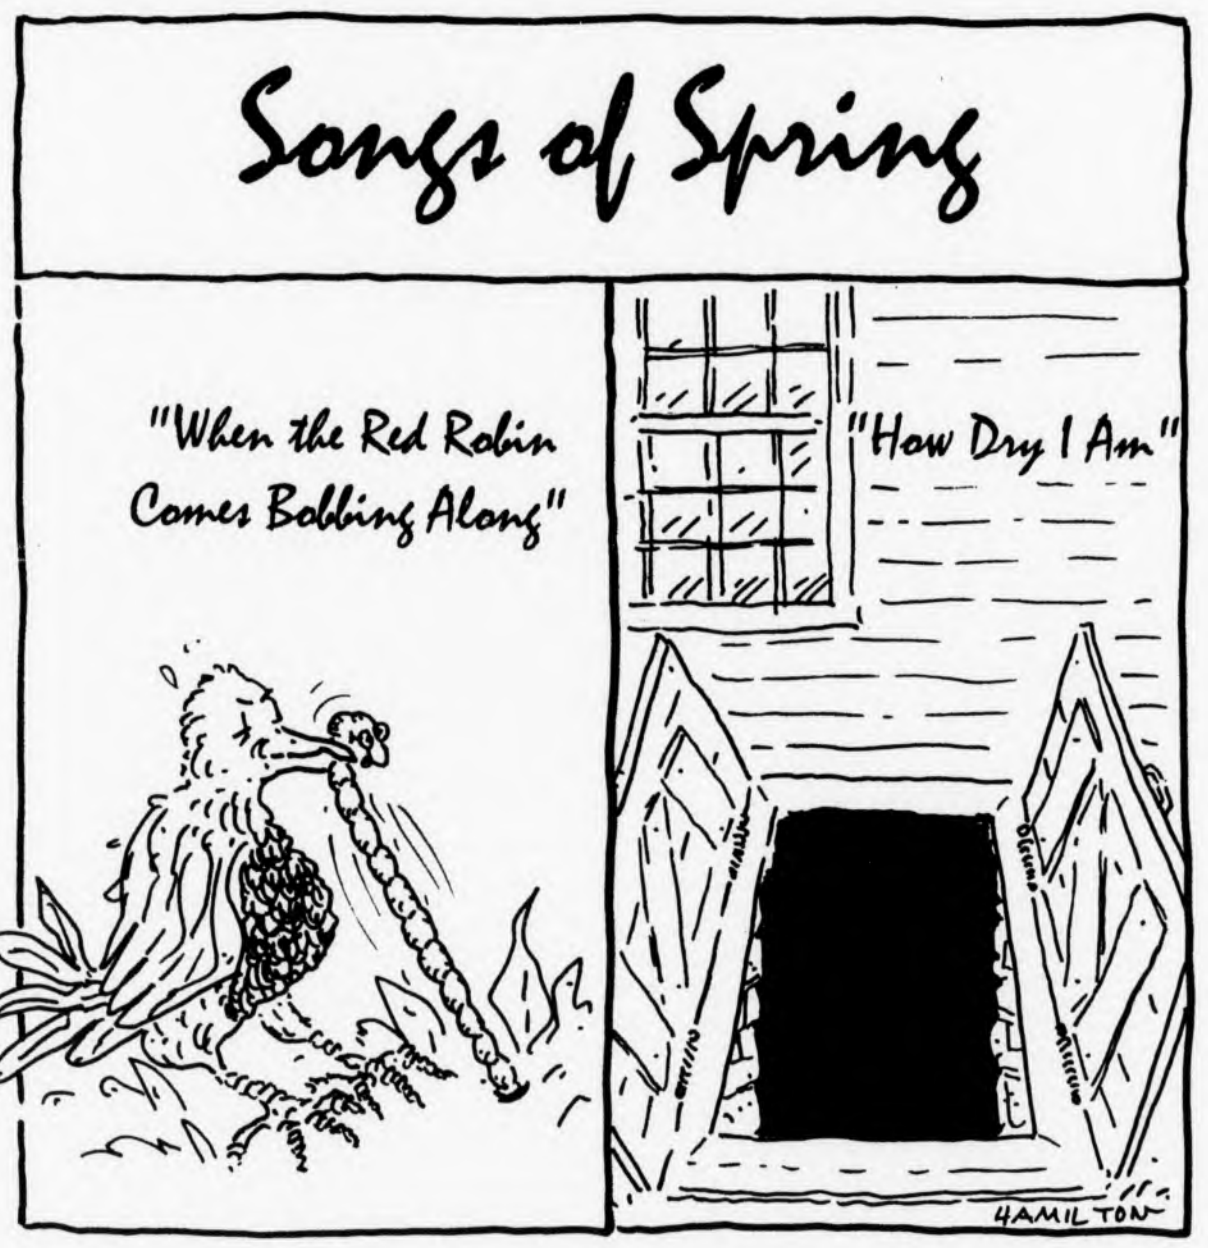
There may be little that can be done to curb epidemics among skunks, raccoons, coyotes and feral cats, but there's plenty that can be done to protect humans and their companion animals. The critical first step is being a responsible pet owner.

Spay or neuter your pet as soon as it is old enough. Many people resist that step, saying they want Fifi or Fluffy to produce one litter so their child can see the miracle of birth. That "miracle" is offset by the fact 150,000 cats and dogs are turned over to shelters, pounds and veterinarians in Massachusetts each year. Of those, about 20 percent of the dogs and 50 percent of the kittens and cats will be destroyed for the "crime" of being unwanted or inconvenient.

The world does not need your pet to reproduce in order for someone to find a pet of their own. The shelters are full to overflowing with cats or dogs. Finding them permanent homes is the real miracle.

Vaccinate your pet. Veterinarians can protect your pet against rabies, distemper, feline leukemia, feline AIDS — a whole host of communicable diseases.

Train and restrain your dogs. You may think Rex is the sweetest little woofums ever born. Your neighbors don't want him romping in the rose bed, chasing the chickens or leaving little packages on the lawn. Dogs should be kept behind closed doors, in a fenced enclosure or on a leash. It's that simple. No one should have to tolerate a dog that bites, fights or destroys property. Cats, too, are best protected from disease, injury and premature if they are kept indoors.



Don't want skunks and raccoons rooting in your yard and spreading disease? Then don't feed your pets outdoors. Keep your garbage and compost pile securely covered.

Teach your children well. No matter how cute and friendly a dog, cat or raccoon may seem, children need to know they cannot approach or touch an animal they do not know. Stranger danger doesn't just apply to the guy in the car — If it comes with teeth or claws, count on it attacking when least expected.

Finally, support the work of groups like Scituate's animal shelter or Pookie's Pals, an organization that rescues feral cats. Their work depends on the kindness of strangers. Both groups are in constant need of money, pet food and old towels and blankets.

The New England Wildlife Center, 19 Fort Hill St., will hold a low-cost rabies clinic for South Shore cats and dogs Saturday, April 18 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Cats should be in carriers, dogs on leashes. The vaccinations are $10 per pet.

Winning can still be a success

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Citizen's for Equitable Environmental Solutions and all voters of Cohasset I would like to thank Patrick Plante for running for a seat on the sewer commission. Pat's expertise, honesty, energy and sense of humor were recognized and appreciated by all those who backed his efforts.

Although his work toward this election did not achieve the level of success he had hoped, his campaign itself was a tremendous success. Due to Pat Plante's efforts, much information about "Cohasset's Sewer Follies" has become public. No longer can the existing sewer commission continue to pursue an agenda and fiscal management policy, which are in conflict with the majority of citizens it has been elected to represent. Even individual citizens, who usually remain on political sidelines, felt compelled to join his efforts. Mr. Plante is an example of a "class act" and should be congratulated on conducting such an honest and forthright campaign.

Gjesteby appreciates support

To the Editor:

Congratulations to he winners on Sunday's election.

I wish to thank my wonderful election committee for their tireless work in my behalf for the Cohasset Selectman's race. Also I wish to thank the voters who supported me.

The Mariner deserves a big thanks for its series with questions and the non partisan approach which allowed valuable insights into each candidate. It was a lot with work writing the answers. It's the voters we would serve and they needed to know our ideas.

It was unfortunate that another very local paper used yellow journalism which played a role on the local level on this election.

Music Parents' Association appreciates support

To the Editor:

The Deer Hill Music Parents' Association wishes to express its appreciation to this year's Deer Hill School band sponsors. A special thank you to the following businesses and organizations:

American Legion Post #118, Bank Boston, C and C Galleries of Norwell, Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804, Cohasset Police Association, Inc., Goodwin Graphics, Inc., Papa Gino's and Victoria's Pizza.

The donations contributed by these organizations will be used to purchase 90 new T-shirts for the fifth- and sixth-grade band members, which will be worn in the upcoming Baseball and Memorial Day parades in Cohasset.

So, when you see a Cohasset Firefighter, Cohasset Police Officer or a veteran, or you make a deposit at Bank of Boston, see Ron Goodwin around town, or stop by Papa Gino's and Victoria's for your favorite pizza, don't forget to thank all of these generous and thoughtful people.

Established in 1994, the Deer Hill Music Parents' Association has a membership of more than 100 members and provides support to the band and chorus directors and programs of the Deer Hill School.

Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset opens

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There was standing room only as hundreds of people attended the special grand opening celebration of Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset last Thursday evening.

Garlands of fresh flowers adorned the railing of the sweeping staircase which is the centerpiece of the Victorian-style mansion soon to be home to dozens of senior citizens.

Mary Pennie, executive director, told the crowd that five people had moved in already.

"It's already starting to feel like a family," she said.

One of the new residents played "My Wild Irish Rose" on the keyboard while another danced to the music the first day they'd moved in, Pennie said.

"It reminded us the building is brick and mortar but what we have here is people," she said.

Sunrise which operates 66 assisted living communities in 13 states — including nine in Massachusetts — prides itself on personal care in a non-institutional, home-like setting.

While the Cohasset facility is huge from the outside, inside the community rooms, such as the parlor and recreation room, are quite small and homelike.

The turreted 62-unit Victorian manor on the west side of Route 3A near Stop & Shop, comes complete with port cochere, concierge and resident dog and cat.

On a tour Saturday, "Silkie" the cat, was making himself at home in the recreation center. About ten new residents including some on the third floor in Sunrise's "Reminiscence" neighborhood for those afflicted with Alzheimer's have moved in so far. One-third of the units are already spoken for.

Assisted-living facilities are for the frail elderly who need assistance with day-to-day personal care such as bathing and dressing, and medication reminders. They do not provide skilled around-the-clock nursing care like nursing homes do.

Sunrise offers a range of apartments from small studios to two-room suites which come with refrigerators and a kitchen sink. Rents average from about $2,700 to $3,500 a month. New residents also pay a one-time community fee averaging $6,000 which is used to maintain the facility and rooms which are remodeled every three years including painting and new wall-to-wall carpeting.

Outside each room is a brass plaque for the resident's name and a "memory box" which can contain photos and personal memorabilia to familiarize staff, fellow residents and visitors with the individual.

All the rooms are wired for cable. Sunrise is equipped with a beauty salon, hydra-tub, a big-screen TV in the recreation room, and Internet library.

Brian C. Swinton, executive vice president of sales and marketing, said Sunrise founder Paul Klaassen brought the idea of Sunrise with him from Holland.

"He wanted to make sure that everyone has the opportunity to live in a fine home the rest of their days," Swinton said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris welcomed the Sunrise community to Cohasset.

"It is a beautiful facility," she said.

McMorris explained that Cohasset has a significant number of older citizens.

"Sunrise will play an important role in fulfilling their needs," she said.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, was also on hand.

She congratulated the staff and particularly praised the food for the grand opening.

"I'd like to be able to stop in for lunch," she said.

Sunrise Assisted Living is based in Fairfax, Virginia. The company went public in June 1996 and trades for on the Nasdaq National Market under the symbol SNRZ. Nationally, assisted living is a $20 billion industry.

According to industry experts, as much as 60 percent of those who have reached the age of 85 need help with daily living activities. The 85-plus age group is expected to double from 3.1 to 7 million people in the next 20 years.

For more information about Sunrise or to arrange a tour, please call 383-6300.

The central foyer at Sunrise is beautifully decorated.

Harbor committee hears marina's expansion plans planned to vote on the matter last night after the Mariner went to press — is also concerned about safety issues if the marina expands to accommodate 100 boats, about double what it has now.

And further complicating the issue is a brewing controversy over ownership of the creek bottom. Trendowicz claims he can prove he actually owns to the middle of Bailey's Creek a narrow channel that runs between Government Island, the Hagerty and Trendowicz properties and Bassings Beach.

Trendowicz told selectmen two weeks ago that he can get the federal anchorage area in the vicinity of his marina removed if need be - a warning that sent ripples through town and packed the meeting room last Thursday with a standing-room only crowd.

Peter Pratt — a former selectman who continues to shepherd the dredging project through a tangled web of permitting by two dozen state and federal agencies — called the ownership matter "a red herring."

"The issue of ownership of the bottom is highly complex relating to Colonial rights," he said. "It is immaterial to any discussion about the federal line which was established by the US Congress in 1939."

Pratt said under the US Constitution, a federal easement over navigable waters would supersede all other rights.

If the town supports Trendowicz's request for the 40-foot realignment of the federal area — which would be dredged at Trendowicz's expense — he would be willing to deed the remaining anchorage area to Cohasset.

"My only recourse is to come here and talk about deauthorizing the channel so my marina can exist," Trendowicz said.

He said he faces fines of up to $25,000 a day if his boats and slips drift into the federal anchorage area.

Trendowicz said it would be a hardship for him to exist behind the federal anchorage line because he would lose half his boats due to lack of room. It had not been a problem before because dredging was not an issue.

"But dredging has been highlighted so much we have to keep behind the anchorage line," he said.

The matter is being raised now because about a month ago Trendowicz learned his request to dredge the inter-tidal zone on the shore side of the marina was turned down by the state waterways division for environmental reasons. The rejection apparently took Trendowicz by surprise because last year he had received approval from the Cohasset Conservation Commission to move ahead with the project.

He plans to about double the size of the existing marina to accommodate a total of about 100 slips. The resulting additional congestion, especially at the mouth of the creek, is also a big worry, Harbor Committee chairman John Bertolami said. Children swim across the creek to get to Bassings Beach and the sailing club sails there. Some of the town moorings are in Bailey's Creek so an increase in harbor traffic is also a concern. At its narrowest point, the creek is about 150 feet across.

But Trendowicz said 80 percent of his existing slips are taken by Cohasset residents. He said because the town is in dire need of more slips, his marina can help fill that need. There are about 300 names on the waiting list for town moorings.

In a letter from the Army Corps of Engineers to Trendowicz, Dubon Montoya, project manager, said the town and DEP would have to seek action from Congress to exclude the 40 foot expansion of the marina from the dredging project although final action is not necessary prior to the project moving ahead.

But Pratt warned any tinkering with the dredging project — which was authorized by an act of Congress and is being paid for with federal money — was dangerous.

"Massachusetts' day in the sun is coming to an end," said Pratt, who said the Boston central artery project - known as the "Big Dig" — is costing 590 million in federal dollars.

He said the federal government is under no obligation to fund the dredging project if all or even part of it is delayed.

"That is discretionary money and it can be taken away," he said.

Pratt said he sympathized with Trendowicz's plight but urged him to hold off a year.

"I say to Paul Trendowicz, I sympathize with you. You have purchased one of the most controversial pieces of marine real estate in New England," Pratt said. "Let's revisit this when the barge leaves the harbor. Then we can work together to solve these complex problems."

Trendowicz purchased the 2.6 acre harbor-front property several years ago. Its prior owner, William Figueiredo, was unable to resolve ownership disputes with the town before he died. Trendowicz said the town never took the creek bottom by eminent domain. Robert Alvarez, a marine engineer representing Trendowicz, said the dredging project is being done on the premise the town owns the property. Federal money cannot be expended for private dredging projects.

"It's messy," Alvarez said.

Town meeting puts out welcome mat for B&Bs

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Town meeting voters opened the door last week for "bed & breakfast homes" in town.

The zoning by-law change — approved by the requisite 2/3 vote— will permit homeowners to use up to two bedrooms in their houses to operate small bed and breakfast inns without zoning board approval.

Dorothy Keville, 2 Stockbridge St., the sponsor of the article — which is an item of business before town meeting — withdrew her application for special permit for a B&B last year when the zoning board leaned toward denying it. (Under the state zoning act, if the board denied her application, she would have had to wait two years to reapply).

The process propelled her to take the matter to town meeting.

Although Keville was unable to attend the continued session of town meeting Monday, March 30 — Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, spoke on her behalf.

"We have an excellent zoning board which provides a mechanism for thought to see if something is reasonable and in the overall town's best interest."

ROBERT STURDY, SPEAKING AGAINST THE ARTICLE.

He said the process was a lengthy and costly one for Keville who hired a lawyer to assist her. Rizzo said under the by-law change, larger B&Bs — with three or more bedrooms — would still be required to have a special permit.

A sticking point with the zoning board last year was Keville's parking situation. Cars exiting her driveway must back out, Rizzo said. He said requiring a turnaround for small B&Bs was too strict a guideline.

A majority of selectmen backed the article.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said small B&Bs should be encouraged because they would benefit homeowners and the town by providing added rooms in town for people to rent.

Selectman Michael Sullivan presented the minority view saying the by-law change would permit businesses in residential zones.

"It would take away the checks and balances individuals have for businesses in the neighborhood," he said. "(Under the current system) neighbors in opposition have the opportunity to speak through a public body."

Saying the current process is too arduous for small B&Bs, the advisory committee backed the article.

The planning board was split 3-2 in favor of it.

But planner Robert Sturdy argued against it at town meeting.

He said the current zoning by-laws provide a safety valve.

"We have an excellent zoning board which provides a mechanism for thought to see if something is reasonable and in the overall town's best interest," Sturdy said.

The article passed with a vote of 102-42 which was more than the 95 votes needed for the 2/3 majority required to change the zoning by-law.

Zoning board expected to decide CHL cases

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The zoning board of appeals is expected to render decisions tonight on two separate zoning bylaw violations by the owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill. CHL appealed two cease and desist orders from Building Inspector Robert Egan for a permit violation and for dumping refuse in an area of the landfill not permitted for landfilling.

"I expect we will be reviewing our draft decisions and expect we will vote on both matters and file our decision the following day," said zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo.

The zoning board of appeals is expected to uphold an order by Egan forcing CHL to remove 7,800 square-feet of refuse it placed in an area of the landfill not permitted for dumping. On Jan. 29, Egan issued a cease and desist order against CHL for placing the refuse in the unapproved section, Area IV-B, and ordered the removal of all refuse.

Paul Barry, one of the owners of the landfill, admitted placing the refuse in Area IV-B, but said it was put there accidentally, and that the material had been properly capped in 1989 when landfilling ceased in that section of the property.

CHL appealed Egan's decision, saying it could not remove the refuse without approval from DEP and the health board because of possible environmental damage.

On Jan. 12, Egan ordered CHL to shut down because former landfill owner James Tyeryar did not file a special permit issued by the zoning board with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. The special permit to operate a landfill was issued by the zoning board in 1976, but Tyeryar never filed it with the county, nor did Barry after he bought the facility.

Egan ruled that CHL is in violation of the town's 1986 Water Resource District Bylaw, which prohibits any landfill from operating in the district unless it was in lawful operation before enactment of the law.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), said the landfill cannot claim grandfathered status in the water protection district. McNabb said CHL could only claim grandfathered status if it was a legal structure, which it is not. But it is a use, which cannot claim that status. McNabb said Town Counsel Paul DeRensis uncovered a similar case where a quarry classified as a use did not file a special permit on time and was found in violation of the town's bylaws by a court.

"The ZBA, backed by town counsel, is expected to affirm the building inspector's decision," McNabb said. "After the ZBA upholds the decision, the town can go to court and seek an injunction to shut down CHL."

McNabb has also the building inspector's decision not to fine CHL for failing to remove the refuse in Area IV-B. McNabb will argue before the zoning board tonight that CHL should be fined $100 a day for every day the illegal refuse stays in Area IV-B. The material was placed in Area IV-B in 1989, and McNabb said the fine should be retroactive to that year, which would place its cost at close to $300,000.

"The fine is not customary and it is pushing the envelope, but SAFE would be remiss if it didn't request the fine," McNabb said. He added that CHL is expected to appeal to Norfolk Superior Court any decisions by the zoning board to uphold the building inspector's orders.

SAFE setback at planning board

John McNabb, a spokesman for Stop Any Further Expansion, suffered a setback in his quest to see fines imposed on the Cohasset Heights Landfill. McNabb asked the planning board April 2 to back the $292,000 fine he wants the building inspector to charge the landfill. But the board said the issue hinged on enforcement and was the responsibility of the zoning board. McNabb is appealing the building inspector's decision to leave the fine off the order to remove the waste. The landfill management has admitted it dumped up to 2,000 tons of waste in the wrong section of the landfill, in violation of the zoning laws.

Good weather draws nearly 1,000 runners By-The-Sea

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

As the weather goes, so goes the Cohasset Road Race By The Sea. And last Sunday, the weather wasn't bad at all.

A large field of 945 runners answered the starting gun in the 22nd annual 10K (6.2 miles) event under partly sunny skies and cool conditions.

Race director Roy Fitzsimmons said 100 runners registered on Saturday and 335 filled out entries on race day. But he believes the cold wind may have led many more potential entrants from skipping this year's race.

"The weather is the factor," said Fitzsimmons. "If it had been sunny and in the 60s, we would have had another 100, maybe 200 runners.

"It was kind of cool and I think that dissuaded some from coming."

The Cohasset race lived up to its billing once again as one of the premier running events on the South Shore. Starting on North Main St. in Cohasset Village, the course turns onto Atlantic Ave., before heading to the rolling hills of Jerusalem Road. Runners then push uphill at Forest Ave. and follow the rolling route back to North Main St. and the finish line in front of town hall.

Charlestown's Tom Lynch bucked the strong headwinds on Jerusalem Road, enroute to first place in 32 minutes, 53 seconds. Randolph's Mel Gonsalves finished second (33:05), followed by Dorchester's Peter Gallimore in third (33:41). Master's winner Bob Chasen of Weymouth took fourth overall in 33:50.

Plymouth's Mary Lynn-Currier was an easy winner in the women's field, traversing the scenic route in 34:24. Somerville's Melissa Mendel of Somerville took second (37:10) with Medfield's Sarah Nixon claiming the third slot (39:08).

Fitzsimmons applauded the Cohasset Rotary Club, the race's main sponsor,

Skippers get better of Crusaders for first win

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

It took two games and a week's worth of frustration, but the Cohasset High baseball team finally started clicking on all cylinders.

With a hotly-contested 2-1 victory over the Carver Crusaders, the Skippers upped their record to 1-2. Battling injuries that have beleaguered its pitching staff, the team now appears poised to make their run.

"We played tremendous baseball," coach Bob Knurek said, in reference to the Carver win. "We played to our potential for the first time all season. We finally showed a glimmer of how tough we can be to beat if we play with consistency."

Following a loss to Norton and another to East Bridgewater, Cohasset hosted Carver Monday.

With last year's ace Joe Pergola kept from the mound by a sore arm, and junior captain Greg Taylor a few days away from his first pitching start in two years, Knurek sent Sean Parkinson to the hill.

Parkinson is the team's starting catcher and its fifth- or sixth-string pitcher. However, on this day he looked like Cy Young.

Swapping sides of the plate with four-year battery-mate Jim O'Sullivan, Parkinson used a combination of fastballs, change-ups and curveballs to baffle the Carver offense. In addition, he was backed by an errorless defense, which featured several spectacular plays.

ing in his first varsity game, made a diving catch, coming in hard from right field and narrowly missing a collision with a back-pedaling Pergola.

Senior captain Pat Hurley made a similarly acrobatic catch in the fourth. Sprinting back from his position at first base, Hurley was able to snag a pop-up and hang on to the ball when his body hit the ground.

Al Schwerin played flawless third base, making four tough plays and throwing bullets across the diamond to Hurley.

Up the middle, Taylor and Pergola were solid and they were backed by an outfield of Minnar, Ben Ketchum in center and Denis Rooney in left. When given the chance, the outfielders made the plays, particularly Ketchum on numerous fly balls to center. The Crusaders only collected three hits in seven innings.

The Skippers also had luck on their side. When Parkinson tired in the fifth, donned his catcher's equipment and O'Sullivan toed the slab. With men on second and third and one out, Carver's clean-up hitter flied to centerfield. Ketchum made the play, the runners tagged, one scoring and one moving to third.

Ketchum threw the ball in to the infield and play was ready to resume when Hurley and Schwerin alerted their pitcher that a runner may have left early. Calling for an official appeal on the runner leaving second, O'Sullivan faked a throw to second as the Carver runner broke for him.

As Schwerin called for the ball, Carver's baserunner knew his number was up and Parkinson tagged him to make it official. The play was huge not only because it was the third out, but also because it snuffed a late game rally for the Crusaders.

In the seventh, Carver threatened, when their lead-off batter ripped a straight knuckleball into left field. But two consecutive outs finished off the game and gave Cohasset their first win of the season.

Although their bats remained relatively quiet, the Skippers did collect four hits, just enough to get the job done. Hurley showed excellent timing at the plate and picked up two hits, and Taylor led off the game with a single.

It was Ketchum's two-run single with no outs in the first, however, that provided the game-winning RBI's. Hitting is Cohasset's main weakness right now, as they exhibited outstanding pitching and tight defense against Carver.

The Skippers have regained their confidence with a team that many picked to win the league this year. If rain doesn't force a postponement of a home game against Abington Thursday, then Taylor will get the ball for his first start back since his shoulder injury.

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

IS YOUR LIFE LOPSIDED?

In a theoretical sense, chiropractic's goal is to restore balance and harmony to the body. In a more tangible sense, many people have habits that make them very receptive to what chiropractic has to offer. For instance, many business people lug around briefcases and suitcases with one hand. Over time, this practice taxes soft tissues as they strain to compensate for a weight-bearing habit that leverages the body. In severe cases, muscles may go into spasm and joints may become misaligned. Beyond correcting the effects of lopsided habits, the chiropractor may recommend healthier carrying and lifting techniques, as well as design a preventive program of care. Good posture is essential to maintaining health.

To prevent future spinal problems, you need to remember healthy habits. Strengthen your spine and your whole body with good posture and regular exercise. Boost you overall health by staying active, eating right, and taking time to relax. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are uniquely qualified to restore the health of your spine. Along with spinal adjustments and related care, we emphasize healthy everyday living. Chiropractic works! Call us at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor.

P.S. Rather than a single catastrophic event, much damage sustained by the body is due to an accumulation of daily insults that people hardly notice until they cannot function as well as they would like.

Young CHS lacrosse squad gets offensive early

Take a good look at the CHS girls' lacrosse team. You're going to be seeing them around the school for a while.

SPORTS WRAP-UP

Of the 15 ladies came out for the team this spring there was only one senior (defenseman Ali Kinchla) and one junior (center Meaghan Connolly) in the group, leaving first-year coach Nicole Mladenoff with a sophomore dominated squad to work with.

"They're young, but there really is some skill on this team," said Mladenoff, a Scituate native who picked up the game while at St. Michael's College. "It's obvious that a lot of these girls have gone to the camps and learned how to play the game. I looking for this team to have a strong year."

The team has had some success early in the season, losing a close one to division rival Sandwich 7-6, but coming back to do away with Algonquin 15-3 in a non-league game.

Connolly and attack player Kaitlyn Donovan (five goals each) have led the scoring so far, followed closely by attack wing Jennifer Chastain with four goals and tri-captain Jackie Kahn with two goals..

On the defensive side of the story, Kinchla and Caitlyn Stansell have anchored the defense in front of Claire Sceery, who made 11 saves in the opening games. Caitlyn O'Neil, Carolyn Cameron, Maggie O'Conner, Kate Bosworth, Grace Gardner and Ashley Koed have also been strong in front of the net.

"Claire has done an awesome job for us," said Mladenoff. "Overall the offense is ahead of the defense right now, but that will even out as the year goes along. It's just a matter of the players getting used to one another and feeling more comfortable in their positions."

"Offense is not going to be a major problem for us this year," she added. "We've got some great scorers on the team."

Mark May 15 on your calendar. There will be a lacrosse jamboree at Alumni Field with fun for everyone, featuring games for both varsity teams.

There will be a food court offered and CHS lacrosse alumni will be recognized at the event. There will also be clinics between the games.

The CHS lacrosse team, under the direction of first-year coach Nicole Mladenoff, has started the year off with a 1-1 record.

Leading the way this season will be the senior duo of pitcher Kelly Tufts and shortstop Lauren Dooley.

"Kelly is solid and now she has a world of experience on the mound," said Gill about the ace of his pitching staff. "The more she gets out there the better of a player she is going to be."

Having only played two games and suffered through a pre-season weather pattern not helpful to training, Gill said it was tough to make a judgment on how far his team was going to go this season.

But that's not to say there haven't been some positive sparkles.

Even though they put 12 runs on the board in their win over East Bridgewater, Gill said the thing that impressed him the most was the defense and pitching of that game.

"The pitching and defense has been better than you might expect at this time of the season," said Gill. "We've got something to build upon."

But for the second year in a row there are not many players along for the rebuilding ride. With Cohasset being the smallest school in the area the talent pool seems to get more shallow each year.

With the popularity of the new lacrosse program at the school, ladies at Cohasset now have a choice between softball, baseball, track, sailing and tennis if they want to play a spring sport.

With all the choices, said Gill, some of the teams are going to suffer.

"Cohasset is just too small of a high school to be able to be competitive in all of the sports," said Gill. "We didn't cut anybody who came out for the team. Everyone who wanted to play softball is here."

Since only 11 players came out, there is no varsity or JV team. A team at the middle school will begin play later in the spring.

Even if things do get a little rough later in the year, Gill said his team will be able to take it.

"We've really got a great group of kids," he said. "They don't care who they are going out there against. They just want to be get out on the field and compete."

Starting behind the plate will be freshman Sarah Kidder, who will also see time at other positions on the field.

Junior Kellie Straughn looks strong at first base. Danielle Kupsc, Dooley, and Meaghan Waal round out the infield.

Seeing time in the outfield will be Katherine Ronan, Meredith Ronan, Stephanie Cook, Meaghan Cox and Jennifer Meehan.

There may not be many of them in uniform, but CHS softball coach Mike Gill says that opponents will not find a pushover in the Lady Skippers this season.

Only 11 players came out for the team this season but Gill said the squad already looks to be improved from last year's 5-15 team.

for its contribution to the race and the work it does for the town in general. "They do so much good for this town and a lot of it is behind the scenes," he said.

Fitzsimmons, who founded the race, said the many volunteers assess every year's event to determine what areas can be improved for the following year.

"We hope everybody has a fun day," Fitzsimmons said. "It seems to get better and better every year. We make sure we accommodate the runners."

Local runners fared well once again with Mary Ernst (46:43) taking fifth in the 40-49 division, Jacqueline Dormitzer claiming fifth in 50-59 (65:27) and Bob Callahan running to a fifth-place finish in the Men's 50-59 group (41:08).

Bob and Jake Morgan took first- and fifth-place, respectively, in the Men 14-17 division. They finished in 39:28 and 48:35. Ross Lappen won the Under-14 title (49:20) as Cohasset runners claimed three of the top-five spots. Andrew O'Keeffe finished fourth (54:02) and Paul Cotter was fifth (56:00).

The Cohasset threesome of Lindsay Grossman (59:30), Meaghan Rizzotti (65:41) and Anna Murphy (65:46) swept the second thru fifth slots in the Girls Under-14 category.

Next year's race will be held on the last Sunday in March instead of the traditional first Sunday in April because of the Easter holiday.

New student state tests get mixed reviews

Testing starts May 4

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Schools superintendent Stephen Hart and Cohasset High principal Curtis Collins had sorry news and happy news April 2 about the new state tests. Though both told an accurate story, Collins tackled the bright side of things while his superintendent dealt with the downside. The principal sounded largely upbeat, as he revealed plans for academic rallies and cookie breaks during the marathon three-week session. In contrast, Hart said he is "frustrated" the tests may label students who underachieve. He said Massachusetts should have tried harder to avoid mistakes other states have made with the new "high-stakes" tests.

Cohasset students are expected to drop below their past performances when they tackle the new state achievement tests, Hart said. Some may even be labeled "failures," even though these tests technically will not stop anyone from receiving a diploma. (The tests do not become the "high-stakes" test until the year 2003.) Nonetheless, he wished the state education department would opt to learn from past errors rather than accept the mistakes as unavoidable.

The new state tests pose a dilemma for educators, such as Hart and Collins. Both told the school board April 2 they favor tests to evaluate achievement in the classroom. But Hart also questioned the method of scoring the state has adopted. It assumes more than half the students who take the test will score in the bottom three levels. He said students who win acceptance at competitive four-year colleges probably cannot be "equated with someone who didn't have basic skills," though some are likely to score at the low rank. Ultimately, educators would have to decide what the new tests "really mean."

Meantime, the tests start May 4. The school district has scheduled two preparation nights for the parents at Deer Hill April 13 and at the high school April 15. The parents will be asked to help their children get to bed on time and get to school on time. They will also be urged to see the youngsters eat breakfast.

The tests are physically grueling. They will take 11 hours and will be spread over 15 days. Then Cohasset fourth, eighth and tenth graders face a battery of questions about math, science, English, technology and foreign languages. School will have a different atmosphere over the three test weeks, said principal Curtis Collins. He said the teachers will "ease off" the regular homework assignments during the test.

"This is going to affect the entire school for three weeks," he said. The principal said in the long run the tests would make instruction and student achievement better. Meantime, the exam amounted to a test of the teachers and the curriculum. He said the "gaps" in a student's education would show up more, under the new testing strategy. Schools would score high if they developed programs to link education from kindergarten to tenth grade.

> "The tests are not to be feared. This is the first time out of the barrel."
> — PRINCIPAL CURTIS COLLINS

"The tests are not to be feared," Collins said. "This is the first time out of the barrel."

Cohasset students won South Shore bragging rights when the state test scores were announced last fall. But the same students may see lower than usual results next November when the new state tests scores are released. Hart said he did not expect the students would turn in the same kind of performance after they grapple with the new state achievements. On the old tests, students in the district ranked in the 81st percentile last time, meaning they did better than 81 percent of the other students on the test. Collins said they managed the feat even though the "culture" downplayed the importance of the state tests which do not count towards the student's grades. He said the students knew these tests do not count either. He said the teachers face a challenge keeping the youngsters motivated to perform.

School board mulls policy on teacher tuition

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A controversy over paying for teachers' education spilled over at a school board meeting April 2. Under the current union contract, the school district repays educators for their tuition in a master's degree program. The repayment hinges on the superintendent's OK only. But the school board decides if the teachers can enroll in the master's program, and some committee members are questioning if the graduate education deal always means a good deal for the community.

At stake is not just the tuition benefits. When teachers earn a master's degree, they command higher salaries. The so-called "step increase" impacts the payroll, driving the costs of education higher. Now the board is looking closely at the types of master's programs teachers are considering, with an eye to ruling out a duplication of skills.

The questions came up when the board reviewed applications from two Osgood School teachers. Both have applied to a program that teaches educators how to use the arts to teach the regular curriculum. The board members said they preferred to see teachers at the same school develop a variety of skills. Eyeing the "big picture," the school board debated the merits of approving master's programs for teachers on a piecemeal basis.

School board member Ralph Kidder said he favored investing in teachers. But he was "troubled" to see two teachers going after the same specialized degree program. Kidder said the circumstances made him wonder if the school district was getting a benefit equal to the expenses.

"There needs to be a tradeoff," he said. "It needs to be clear we are getting our investment back." He said training one teacher in the special skill could add to the school's learning culture. He doubted it would be necessary to train two of them.

"It only takes one person in the building to make up some demonstration lessons," he said. He did not take issue with the value of the courses, however.

School board member Joseph McElroy said he would prefer to see the teacher's make a commitment to the district in return for the tuition money. Drawing on his military experience, McElroy said individuals there signed up for "an extra hitch" of three to six years when they accepted education benefits. He said since the current teacher contract does not include such a provision, he would like to discuss the option in the upcoming negotiations. Meantime, he said the board might set a deadline such as June 30 for master's program applications and then review all of them at once.

The board tabled the question pending talks with legal counsel.

Plans for new handbook get underway

School board member Joseph McElroy announced April 2 a new rule book for the school district is on the way. The panel picked to write the new policy manual holds its first session April 13. They will seek public comment, he said. Because most policies will deal with the middle school and the high school, McElroy suggested the new rules go on the web site, so parents can dial up, see what the policy is and offer changes as needed.

Eyeing an August 1 deadline, he expects to have a draft of the new manual prepared before schools superintendent Stephen Hart steps down.

The schools need new rules, according to a recent audit report. It found fault with the district because the policy handbook was too old.

ExCel lecture is April 25

CYC and the Sailing Club present the third annual ExCeL lecture Saturday, April 25, at 8 p.m. at Walton Rogers Hall, St. Stephen's Church.

Lory Newmyer and Ed McCabe of the Hull Lifesaving Museum will share insights and anecdotes about the turn-of-the-century lifesavers of Hull and Cohasset and what can be learned from them today. An entertaining slide show and lecture will incorporate evocative historical images from the museum's collection juxtaposed with photographs from the youth rowing and job-training programs.

Ed McCabe is the museum's co-founder and Maritime Program Director and is a lifetime rower with an in-depth knowledge about Boston Harbor heritage and lore. Lory Newmyer is the museum's executive director who is also an avid open-water rower and aficionado of the region's proud lifesaving heritage.

All proceeds will benefit the ExCeL Alternate School Program at Cohasset High School. The ExCeL (Experimental Center for Learning) program is an interdisciplinary accredited program for students in grades 10 to 12 offering unique marine experimental activities and traditional coursework in science, social studies and English. Students may enroll in the program for one, two or three years. Course work includes field studies and lab work in fundamental principles of oceanography, physical science, navigation, aquatic environmental science and nautical science. Outdoor activities include learning to crew and care for a traditional pulling boat. Students also learn the fundamentals of boat building by working on current wooden boat projects.

This is the third year that the Cohasset Yacht Club has presented an illustrated slide cruising lecture open to the public to benefit the ExCeL program. This year, the club welcomes the participation of the Sailing Club. Advance reservations may be made by telephone before April 20 by calling Jim Hamilton at 383-9834 for reserved tickets, $8 for adults and $4 for students under 18. Unreserved tickets at the door will cost $10 for adults and $5 for students under 18. Refreshments will be served.

Alzheimer's Support Group meets April 29

The Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore meeting Wednesday, April 29, 7:30 p.m., will focus on how psychiatric care and services can assist both the Alzheimer patient and the family caregiver. Roberta Guez, LICSW, program director of Quincy Heights, the psychiatric division of Quincy Hospital, will describe the dementia assessment services that are available for those seeking a thorough diagnostic workup when Alzheimer's disease is suspected. The Cognitive Disorders Clinic staff at Quincy Heights includes a range of professionals with inpatient and outpatient care. Ms. Guez, who has many years of experience in geriatric services, will also explain how the patient's assessment can enhance the caregiver's role in coping with daily management of the patient. An open discussion of caring for an Alzheimer patient will follow the presentation.

This meeting is open to anyone interested in learning more about Alzheimer's disease. It will be held at Thaxter Community Hall, 30 Thaxter St., Hingham.

OBITUARIES

Thomas F. Murphy

Thomas F. Murphy, 72, of Cohasset, a former professional baseball player, died Tuesday, March 24, at home.

Mr. Murphy played first base for minor league affiliates of the Boston Red Sox and Boston Braves.

He went on to work as a lead sales representative for the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. in the 1960s and 1970s.

He was born in Cambridge and was a graduate of Somerville High School and Boston University.

He leaves his wife, Ruth Dorion Murphy; a son, Michael T. Murphy of Hingham; three daughters, Susan Thornton of Ohio, Sarah Rennie of Hingham and Elizabeth Adomkaitis of Duxbury; a brother, Joseph Murphy of Medford; two sisters, Rose Montgomery of Stoneham and Marion Murphy of Woburn; five grandchildren; and a great-granddaughter. Mr. Murphy was also brother of the late James, Frank, Edward, Arthur and John Murphy.

A funeral service was held at the Bigelow Chapel at Mount Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge. Interment was in Mt. Auburn Cemetery.

Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Anthony DiNicola

Anthony DiNicola, 78, of Hingham, and previously of Cohasset, died March 28, in Weinsier, FL. Anthony was a retired machinist of Proctor and Gamble, in Quincy.

Anthony was the husband of the late Elizabeth (Ishom), and leaves daughter Diane Amonte of Hingham, and grandchildren Michael Amonte of Jamaica Plain, and Andrea Amonte of Hingham. He also leaves several nieces and nephews.

Anthony died suddenly while vacationing with his niece in Weinsier, FL.

He was a Navy Veteran of World War II, he was also associated with several local chapters of the Experimental Aircraft Association, and Plymouth Aero Clubs. Tony fully restored a vintage Fairchild 24 in his earlier years and had maintained a Cessna 182 in which he traveled to and from the Caribbean, Florida and the midwest. Tony also enjoyed working on model trains.

He was born in Quincy and moved to Cohasset in the late '40's where he lived for 45 years before moving to Hingham.

A funeral mass was held at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset Friday, April 3. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery also in Cohasset. Donations may be made to the Kidney Foundation, 180 Rustcraft Road, Dedham, MA 02026, or to St. Paul's Building Fund, 1476 North Street Hingham, MA 02043.

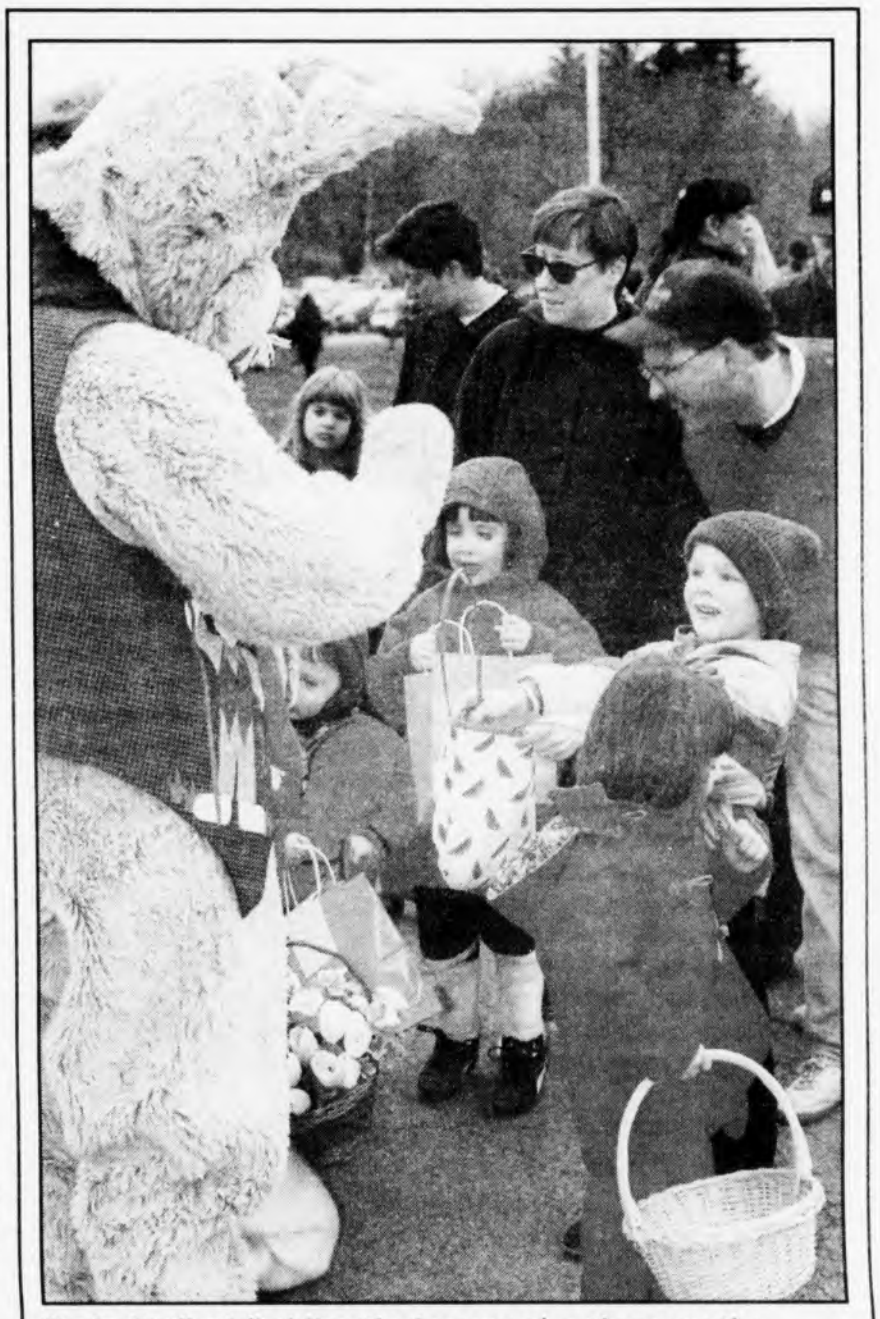
Holy Week at St. Stephen's Church



Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., will celebrate the Great Vigil of Easter, a candlelight service Saturday, April 11, at 7:30 p.m. The worship is dramatic, beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when resurrection is proclaimed, the lights are turned on signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that leads the world out of darkness.

Worship Easter morning, Sunday, April 12, will be at 8 and 10 a.m. with the full choir and choristers. Both services, Eucharist with sermon, will be in the church.

Prior to Easter, there will be worship in the church on Maundy Thursday, April 9, at 7:30 p.m. This Eucharist commemorates the last supper and the importance of community for the church's life together in Christ. Following the Eucharist will be a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time — breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits, and milk and honey!

A 24-hour Prayer Watch will begin Maundy Thursday at 3 p.m. Parishioners sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet or meditate. It recalls the words of Psalm 130: "My soul waits for the LORD more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." It is a powerful experience of prayer each minute throughout the day bringing the church into Good Friday.

Good Friday worship begins at noon April 10 with an hour of quiet. The Prayer Book liturgy begins at 1 p.m. A service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross. A number of parishioners will participate in the 20-mile Good Friday walk raising money to assist economically poor areas of the South, particularly in rural Mississippi.

Volunteers sought for Search Committee

The search for a new superintendent for the Cohasset Public Schools has begun in earnest, with an anticipated selection of our new CEO scheduled for mid-June. If you are interested in serving as an at-large member of the Superintendent Search Committee, submit a nomination to the superintendent's office no later than April 20, with your name, address, telephone number and a brief statement why you are interested in serving and what contribution you will make to the process.

The school committee is looking for a superintendent who is a proven educational leader and who has an advanced degree, a minimum of 10 years in education, experience as a classroom teacher as well as a manager well-versed in school finance or business management and who has demonstrated success in the following areas:

- long-range strategic planning
- developing high expectations and performance standards and holding administrators, teachers, staff and students accountable for their achievement
- managing the operations of a school system or comparable business
- developing budgets within the fiscal realities of the town
- developing and implementing curriculum, with emphasis on the requirements of the Education Reform Act of 1993
- team building, enthusiastic leadership and excellent communication skills
- establishing and managing a productive, collaborative professional relationship with the school committee, staff, students, parents and the wider community.

The deadline for submitting completed applications is April 17. Working with a consultant from the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, we will select semi-finalists by early May. The Superintendent Search Committee, consisting of administrators, teachers, students, parents, other residents and a former school committee member, will interview the semi-finalists from May 4 to 7. This group will rank order the candidates and the school committee will then select the finalists. After candidate visits to Cohasset and school committee visits to the current workplaces of the finalists, the school committee will interview finalists from June 8 to 11, with selection to follow. All meetings of the Search Committee and interviews by the school committee will be open to the public, although public participation will be strictly limited to observation.

Let us know by April 20 if you are interested in serving on the Superintendent Search Committee.

Hubbard remembered in memorial fund drive

Celebrating its 20th anniversary, the Hull Lifesaving Museum, Inc. is launching its first capital fund drive, in memory of its former board president, Jack Hubbard of Cohasset, who died last summer while rowing off Minot's Light. The fund-raiser co-chaired by Francine Townsend, of Hull, and John Larkin Thompson, of Scituate, will complete the restoration of the museum's 1889 Point Allerton U.S. Life Saving Station and further improve its South Shore Boathouse, located at Pemberton Point. The campaign's Honorary Chair is Mr. Hubbard's widow, June Hubbard.

At the time of his death, in June 1997, Hubbard was helping to sustain an exciting renaissance at the museum. The Hubbards, avid naturalists, rowers and local activists, were active in the museum from its earliest days, participating in the first phase of reclamation in the early '80's, which protected the buildings from demolition and restored many of their outstanding historical features. Hubbard was involved, as well, in the planning of Phase 2 of the restoration, based upon valuable research by architectural historical Wick York of Mystic Seaport Museum and Building Conservation Associations, of Dedham.

Jack Hubbard

Joshua James, the most celebrated lifesaver in American history, was the Keeper of the Point Allerton U.S. Life Saving Station. He and his crew were among the most active and capable surfmen in the country—with the astonishing record of never losing a life during hundreds of rescues from shipwrecks in Boston Harbor. The museum is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and holds a collection that includes the Point Allerton Station, the surfboat "Nantasket," historic photographs and letters and the vintage gear that the surfmen of the station used as illustrious, turn of the century "Storm Warriors."

In addition to preserving the artifacts of the U.S. Life Saving Service and Massachusetts Humane Society, the museum also perpetuates the skills, ethic and character traits of the region's lifesavers through its renowned Maritime Program, a national model for experiential education programs. The Maritime Program operates out of two museum boathouses, one in the National Park in the Charlestown Navy Yard and the other at Pemberton Point. The program uses the rowing metaphor of "pulling together" to transcend barriers of age, gender, language, culture, class and race in rigorous, year-round education, recreation and job-skills programs. Over 350 metropolitan area youngsters and adults benefit annually from the Maritime Program's initiatives in the living classroom of Boston Harbor.

Basing activities in its, "To Preserve and Perpetuate the Maritime Heritage and Lifesaving Tradition of Hull, Boston Harbor and the Surrounding Region," the museum's programs and exhibits reflect an enduring sense of social responsibility and commitment to the future, as well as to the past. Seeking to continue Hubbard's work and honor him in full measure, the goal of the Jack Hubbard Memorial Fund is to raise $75,000 by June 9, 1998, the first anniversary of his death. If you would like to participate, please contact the museum at (781) 925-5433.

Zoning board orders CHL shut down for good

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

It looks like the Cohasset Heights Limited, the privately owned landfill, could be shut down permanently.

The zoning board of appeals has upheld two cease and desist orders issued against the company by building inspector Robert Egan, effectively ordering the owners of the dump to shut it down for good.

The decision caps off what may have been the worst week ever for the owners of the landfill, Paul and John Barry. In the last seven days, Land Court Chief Justice Peter Kilborn upheld the town's Water Resource District boundary line, rejecting CHL's assertion that the line was arbitrarily drawn to block the landfill's Area V expansion.

The zoning board delivered its unanimous decision last Thursday, April 9, in the middle of a long night of unrelated hearings. The two court decisions came after the zoning board delivered its decisions. Paul Barry sat quietly in the hearing room dressed in a dark blue laborer's uniform and baseball cap as the zoning board read the two decisions.

Barry had little to say after the meeting.

"The actions of the building inspector will decide where it goes next," Barry said. When asked, Barry said he would probably appeal the latest decisions.

Egan said he would consult with town counsel and most likely re-issue the cease and desist order.

"I think this is the beginning of where the courts get involved," Egan said. "This is out of the town's hands. I'm certainly not going to lie down in front of any trucks."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is awaiting word from town counsel advising the town on how to proceed to make sure CHL shuts down operations.

In a telephone interview yesterday, Paul Barry confirmed that CHL was still in operation, but he conceded that things did not look good with the zoning board

Marina growth plans sunk

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen will not support changing the federal anchorage area in Bailey's Creek to allow a private marina to expand.

They backed the harbor committee's recommendation by denying Cohasset Harbor Marina's request to move the federal line about 40 feet which would have enabled the marina to continue operating without encroaching into the federal area.

The denial followed assurances from the Army Corps of Engineers — who met with the town manager, harbormaster and marina owner last week — that support to move the federal line would not hold up the dredging project as feared.

Town may get into the sewer supply business

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

For the time being, the only sewering that will go ahead in north Cohasset will be laying several miles of mains in the street.

Although the contract had been awarded, this week selectmen decided not to go ahead with "phase 2" which would connect the homes in the Straits Pond area up to the sewer main.

The town had an escape clause in the contract but will still have to pay the contractor about $9,000 in costs he had incurred so far.

The new plan is to examine using about $1.4 million remaining of the $6.6 million initially appropriated for the entire north Cohasset project to buy the grinder pumps, valves and tanks needed for the about 270 homes in phases 2, 3 & 4. Then the town would turn over the equipment to each homeowner's private contractor for installation.

The state would still require an engineer to supervise installation, the equipment would remain town property and the town would still have an easement on each property, sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil explained.

Because North Cohasset homes require pressure connections — not the traditional gravity hookups — the state looks at the connection as part of the treatment process and therefore allows low interest loans which

Rift between boards widens over Newtonville

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The health board has threatened to sue the sewer commission if it doesn't hook-up four Newtonville homes to the sewer system as soon as possible. The four homes are the same ones that the health board declared public health emergencies last fall. Human feces and other organic waste has been percolating up through soil on the four properties because of failing septic systems. These are also the same four homes approved by town meeting for funding to hook into the town's sewer system.

The owner of one of the homes, David Burnham, came to the health board Tuesday night because fecal material from other systems is draining to his yard. The same material is also seeping into a nearby wetland and draining to the harbor, said health board member Kevin Ulmer. The four homes have old systems that, in some cases, are

For the record

The Mariner incorrectly reported the number votes cast in the sewer commission race last week. The Mariner should have said Henry Rattenbury received 1,176 votes and Patrick Plante received 1,059 making a difference of 117 votes.

School committee meetings televised

School committee meetings have been televised live on Cable Channel 22 since March 19, Supt. Stephen Hart said.

The meetings are held in the new A/V studio at Cohasset High School.

This week's meeting starts at 7:30 p.m. tonight (Thursday).

Selectmen were concerned Monday that school committee meetings were not being televised.

Selectman Tom Callahan said he thought all town board meetings should be televised from time to time.

Ambulance billing update

The fire department billed for 28 ambulance transports last month for a total of $10,353.76. The town actually collected $12,053.81 last month in ambulance bills some of which are from prior months and fiscal years. So far this fiscal year, which ends June 30, the town has collected $85,312.22 out of a possible $98,683.15.

McMorris is new chairman

Selectmen unanimously elected Ronnie McMorris as the board's new chairwoman. Nan Roth will serve as vice chairwoman. Both selectmen Merle Brown and Tom Callahan thanked their supporters in this year's town election.

"I appreciate all the hard work and I'm glad to be back," Brown said.

Committee volunteers are sought

Selectmen would like anyone interested on serving on the Housing Partnership Committee to contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Harbormaster gets top marks

John Bertolami, chairman of the Cohasset Harbor Committee, wrote to selectmen praising Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters.

Bertolami said Winters on his own initiative obtained a grant for the purchase of a patrol/pump out boat saving the town $30,000 to $40,000. The town receives between $6,000 to $8,000 a year towards the salary from the grant for the boat operator.

He also said the thoroughness shown by Winters in his dealings with all the agencies in getting the dredging project through also deserves recognition.

Snow removal account in the black

There is an unexpected balance of $11,825.18 in the town's snow removal account, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said this week. Due to an accounting error, selectmen had been previously notified there was a deficit in the account.

Downside of Straits Pond

Midges wreak havoc on idyllic setting

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The "first midge of the season" traveled inside Anson Whealler's Jerusalem Road home Tuesday night. The mosquito-like insect survived about 14 days after spray day when the combined forces of the Hull and Cohasset conservation commissions zapped Straits Pond with a pesticide called Abate ISG.

"The spray does a pretty good job," Whealler said as he plucked the insect off his dog's coat. "But they come in cycles, and some of the midges always get through. There are just so many of them."

Midges are the downside to life along Straits Pond. But much else about living alongside the body of water between Hull and Cohasset is "really great," according to Whealler. The pond, officially an area of environmental concern, teems with fish and eels. Canada geese, mallards, and all sorts of birds share the waterways with canoes. Monday, life along Straits Pond looked scenic and peaceful. A woman swung a lawnmower expertly over some short green grass near the Atlantic Ocean end. Further toward Hull, a swan claimed a shady spot by the bull rushes out of the water.

Whealler saw the swan under his window later that night. It keeps a nest "down by the Greek Church," he said.

Swans, ducks and fish are signs the pond is not dead after eight to 10 years of choking on an algae mass. But it is not healthy either. Whealler, who has seen it from the air, pointed out the color looks different from the sky.

"Straits Pond is a very different color than the ocean," he said. "It's more of a gray-brown than a blue green," he said. "It looks not too appealing."

Recently, Cohasset and Hull, which both border Straits Pond, took steps to cure the color of the water, the midges and the pollution. All can be traced to the discharge from failed cesspools and septic systems in the watershed.

Hull, according to its town manager Phil Lemnios, paid about $1 million to link 35 or 40 homes near the pond to a sewer pump. The project will end the deposits of nitrates from the septic discharge in the pond. Meanwhile, Cohasset has invested about $6 million so far in the North Cohasset sewer project that finally got a go-ahead. The first phase of the project will lay pipes and mains throughout the area. Within two years, about 136 houses along Jerusalem Road will have to hook up. The septage will be piped into the treatment plant in Hull.

Lemnios said the agreement on a sewer plan between the two communities meant both were making an investment in the area. Last week, the clean up advanced on two other fronts. First, Hull installed a second electric gate at the west corner of the pond to help flush the water in Straits Pond. It gets stagnant and heats up, due to the algae blooms, especially in the summer. And more houses on the Hull side of the pond hooked up to the sewer. Pipes and mains were installed there last fall, according to Norman Rogers, facilities manager at the Hull Sewer Department.

Rogers said conditions in Straits Pond have been slipping for many years, due to the pollution from failed septic systems. He could remember days when youngsters used the pond for hockey practice. But four years ago, when he conducted dye tests on some septic systems near the water, he "just about got the dye in the system and it ran right out into the pond." Rogers said six of eight homes directly on the pond in Hull had now hooked into the sewer system. Two more of the 33 homes in the sewer district expect to complete the hook up next week. Within the next two months, all 33 would be connected, he estimated.

Rogers also said the flushing at the gate by the west corner, the only waterway to the pond, also helped solve the pollution problems. Cohasset helped finance the electric gate to regulate the water volume. Twice a month, the new moon and full moon rake in high tides and brought cold salt water to Straits Pond. The flushing helps get rid of the sewage in the pond.

The pond, which covers about 72 acres, holds about 10 million cubic feet of water, mostly from rainfall.

Dr. Joseph Godzik, the Cohasset health agent, said the clean up will take a number of years. Hooking up sewers to the 136 homes along the Jerusalem Road side of the pond will make a start. But all the homes with failed septic systems in the Straits Pond watershed deposit pollution in the water.

"When they swarm, they could cover your face, get into the eyes, the nostrils and the mouth."

DR. JOSEPH GODZIK, HEALTH AGENT

"You have to remember there are nutrients and other products in the ground water now slowly moving toward the pond. It would take years for a complete clean up. It's not going to be instantaneous," he said.

As for insects, Godzik said midges do not pose a danger from disease but said they can cause irritations.

"When they swarm, they could cover your face, get into the eyes, the nostrils and the mouth," he said.

Overwhelmed by midges

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said the board waded into the Straits Pond issue mainly because of the midges. He called the insects an "environmental problem" more than a health concern. Going up the food chain, nitrates from septage feed algae and other types of blooms that ultimately feed midges.

The next bug in the food chain is the spider, according to Whealler.

"You get a lot of spiders," he said. Though the spiders eat the midges, even they cannot handle the swarms.

"Even their webs get overwhelmed with midges," he said. "You see the webs clogged with midges which isn't particularly attractive."

Whealler about five years ago designed an experiment to estimate the midge population. Since bright lights attract the bugs, he built a three-by-five box. Open on one side, the box held two fluorescent lights inside. The other side of the box, which was covered with plastic, acted like a big strip of fly paper after it was sprayed with "sticky stuff." The bugs went to the light and stuck to the other side of the box.

In one night, in one location, Whealler trapped approximately 69,000 midges.

The midges are called chironomid midges. They look exactly like mosquitoes, except for the antenna. The midge antenna looks "feathery," according to Whealler. Also unlike mosquitoes, midges do not bite. But they do swarm. If they get in the house, he has had to "suck" them off his ceiling with a vacuum cleaner hose. Outside the house, they also can cause irritations.

"If you work outside or paint your house, a huge swarm of midges can really make a mess in wet paint. They really are a nuisance. They just get into everything."

Whealler said the midges posed a problem in the spring and summer months but not in winter. Winters bring pleasures of watching skaters since the pond does freeze. (Straits Pond has fairly low levels of salt water, according to the health agent. He called the water "brackish" but said he source of the salt is probably the Weir River Estuary. He doubted much of the saline water came from the ocean.)

History of Straits Pond

Whealler said the winter of 1992 was particularly good along Straits Pond. The pond froze over "on a real still night" so the ice was not at all bumpy.

"It was like somebody took a Zamboni out there," he said.

Straits Pond was originally formed by rock from a volcanic explosion, according to Rogers. He read about the volcano which scientists estimate has been dead for about 100 million years. It was located near West Roxbury and its eruptions formed Boston Harbor and all the beaches south of Boston from Pemberton to Atlantic Hill in Hull. The rock, called volcanic turf, can be seen in Black Rock. It has 12 layers of alternating deposits, six layers of lava and six of conglomerate volcanic turf.

Rogers said he also found maps to show Straits Pond once opened into the ocean at the Hull and Cohasset line. The water turned brackish after a road built there separated it from the Atlantic. He also found a reference that said Straits Pond sometimes was called the Sea of Galilee.

But David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Society cast doubt Straits Pond ever emptied into the sea. He found nothing in the records that showed it was ever open to the sea.

"In severe storms like the Blizzard of 1978, Straits Pond gets flooded directly from the ocean. The water comes over Black Rock Beach," he said. In the Great Blizzard, he saw waves break over the road and carry wreckage into the pond. Wadsworth said he did not know of any paintings made of Straits Pond. The pond once supported a grist mill on the west end, but the mill "went out of existence by 1800."

The pond area also reportedly played a role in World War II, according to letters sent to the Conservation Commission. A section of the land by Straits Pond was used for Victory Gardens. It was located along Jerusalem Road near Windy Hill. The area became the focus of a 1994 controversy. Neighbors complained because people dumped litter in the garden plot and needed a clean up.

Water rate relief slated for north Cohasset

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

There's good news for Hingham, North Cohasset and Hull Massachusetts-American Water Company (MAWC) customers, whose rates are among the highest in the nation.

Acting Gov. Paul Cellucci signed a bill last week which will benefit communities which have already built new water treatment plants in compliance with new federal drinking water standards.

MAWC is one of those, which spells some rate relief for its customers, whose bills have risen by 154 percent since 1993 in order to pay for the $40 million treatment plant.

The bill creates a state revolving fund (SFR) which provides financial assistance for the construction of drinking water projects. A compromise to resolve differences between separate versions of legislation passed by the Senate and House of Representatives was drafted by a conference committee consisting of Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, two other Senate members and three members of the House.

A number of legislators, including Hedlund, asked that the SRF include companies such as MAWC, which are privately owned, as "grandfathered" projects. These are ones which were completed before the revolving fund program was implemented.

"Why should customers be penalized with high rates because a water problem was corrected in accordance with federal law before this program was available?" Hedlund asked.

The senator worked with House Ways and Means Chairman Paul Haley, D-Weymouth, for the adoption of more extensive guidelines and a larger appropriation which would allow MAWC and other companies in similar positions to be included in the program. The bill signed into law by Cellucci now includes that provision.

"Once the conference committee had finished its work, Gov. Cellucci assured me this important matter of fairness would receive his quick attention," said Hedlund. "I'm relieved this final hurdle has been cleared."

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, agreed, saying, "I'm absolutely thrilled. It's an important decision for citizens in the three towns. It makes sense."

In terms of other legislative actions he's participated in to date, Hedlund said this particular one has been the most time-consuming.

"It has required more work, effort and luck than anything I've worked on to date, and it's rewarding that it has gone through its final step," he said.

MAWC customers pay the highest water rates on the South Shore. The average rate payer is charged $713 annually for water service. In contrast, the average combined water and sewer bill in neighboring communities serviced by the MWRA is $626 annually.

Residents complained in late 1996 when their bills rose by an average of 154 percent over the same period the year before. This resulted from a Department of Public Utilities ruling that allowed MAWC to increase the average water bill by $422 per household — $341 to cover the capital costs related to the plant's construction and $81 for increased operating costs.

The new plant became operational in April, 1996, and the rate increase was approved in June of the same year.

With the signing of the SRF bill comes $8 million in state-appropriated funds for the next 10 years to provide assistance for customers across the Commonwealth who [illegible] paying for projects which have already been completed.

The new law is designed to capitalize on a recently enacted federal program which makes grant monies available to the states for providing assistance to water suppliers complying with the Federal Clean Water Act.

Combined with a matching state contribution of 20 percent, the program is designed to help cushion water rate hikes by reducing the cost of borrowing capital to build water projects.

"The intent of the legislation is that all of the subsidy is to be passed on to rate payers in the form of savings on their water bills," Hedlund emphasized.

James Perry, president of MAWC, said, "This gives us an opportunity to perhaps reduce customer rates to whatever extent we're able."

In fact, the water company made preliminary contacts with the Department of Environmental Protection about the details of the proposal even before Cellucci signed it into law.

"Once everything is nailed down and we fully understand what needs to be done, we will move forward," he said.

Once the water company has applied for the subsidy, the technical aspects of its rate-savings plan will be submitted to the Department of Telecommunications and Energy (formerly the Department of Public Utilities) for approval.

Zoning board orders CHL shut down for good

decisions and the two court decisions.

"I'll meet with my brother and Tony (CHL attorney Anton Moehrke) on Friday and discuss what to do," Barry said.

Moehrke had received the decisions just yesterday and could not comment decisively on any of the matters.

"At the moment, I'm reviewing the decisions," he said. "At this moment, it would appear that CHL has existing operating rights under the present plan approval, and the vertical expansion is obviously subject to the resolution of the overfill. Beyond that, it would be premature for me to comment."

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) and SAFE president Kevin O'Donnell reacted jubilantly to the zoning board's decision.

"This is the endgame," O'Donnell said. "It's a banner day for the town."

O'Donnell said he expected CHL to stay open even after Egan re-issued the cease and desist. That would give the town the opportunity to go to court and seek a court order shutting down CHL.

"CHL will comply with any court orders," O'Donnell said. "They can appeal but it is routine for the court to keep the cease and desist order in place during appeals, which would keep them closed. Of course, they can always ask the court for alternatives."

McNabb said he fully expected CHL to appeal everything.

He discovered the two alleged violations that ultimately resulted in the zoning board's decision to uphold the building inspector's ruling to shut down CHL. Both decisions were on appeals from CHL asking the zoning board to overturn Egan's decisions.

McNabb discovered the first of the two alleged violations last November when he found 7,800 square feet of landfill material in a section of the property not approved for dumping. In its decision, the zoning board upheld Egan's decision to have CHL remove material in compliance with all state Department of Environmental Protection and health board regulations and approvals.

The second alleged violation was uncovered by McNabb in January when he discovered that CHL had never filed its special permit to operate a landfill in Cohasset with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. State law requires permits to be filed with the registry before becoming effective. Egan shut down CHL permanently on a technicality related to not filing the permit.

Part of the landfill sits in the town's Water Resource District, created in 1988. Landfills are prohibited from the district except for facilities that were in legal operation before enactment of the district. Egan ruled that CHL's failure to file the permit meant it wasn't in lawful operation prior to the creation of the water district and could not claim special pre-existing use status. The zoning board upheld Egan's decision, effectively shutting down the landfill for good.

The decision by the land court upholding the Water Protection Boundary bolsters the town's case to shut down the landfill. CHL claimed the water district was created for the singular purpose of shutting down the landfill, but the court denied its claim.

The Norfolk Superior Court decision effectively denies CHL's proposed 27.5-acre expansion. The board of health denied the expansion in 1996 because of what it perceived as potential public health hazards. CHL appealed the board's decision to Norfolk Superior Court, but Judge Borenstein upheld the town's decision.

And two weeks ago, the courts rejected CHL's claims that the town violated its civil rights, according to McNabb.

"CHL is not an individual so it doesn't have any civil rights," McNabb said.

While the Barrys consider their next move, McNabb and O'Donnell plan to continue to try to make sure CHL stays closed.

"Now it's up to the board of health to issue its own cease and desist order and begin hearings to rescind CHL's site assignment," McNabb said.

The health board had planned to discuss CHL last night (Wednesday), but delayed the hearing to gather more information.

New school construction on schedule, officials say

Tucked behind the Deer Hill School, away from traffic and passersby, the building of Cohasset's new elementary school happened out of the public eye. Now with less than five months left until September, the school building committee is making efforts to get the word out. The building is still expected to open in time for the first day of school this September, although the schedule is tight. The exterior shell of the new school is now practically finished, and the rest of the project so far stayed within the budget.

Robert Spoffard of the building committee briefed the school board April 2 about the school opening date and about one glitch that surfaced over plans to air condition the school. He said by July 15 the construction manager Simon Tempest will know if work crews can meet the first day of school deadline. Meantime, the building committee has started work on a contingency plan, in case the building is not ready for the children.

He will go before the selectmen April 27 with a progress report. Meanwhile, he had mixed news about the plan to air condition the whole school. The only contractor allowed to bid on the job offered a price $125,000 over the money the town meeting voted. Spoffard said the building panel decided to award part of the job only. He said the new plan called for the contractor to put in the infrastructure and the pipes to make the building ready for air-conditioning. But without the compressors and air conditioning units, only air circulation would be provided.

Spoffard said the building committee was limited to one bidder because the air conditioning phase of the project had been put out to bid and a bid was accepted. Once that happened, the town was obligated to deal with the winning bidder only on air conditioning. Put another way, the town meeting's later decision to pay the money to cool the whole building was viewed as an expansion of the original job.

Spoffard said he asked for an independent opinion of the new bid and was told it was in line with actual costs. He said the building committee did not have enough money in the contingency fund to come up with the extra $125,000. The contingency fund stands around $70,000 currently, counting only money not earmarked for other items.

Originally, the building committee expected to ask for only $88,000 to air condition a portion of the building. No one expected the voters to opt for a bigger project. The voters did so after hearing arguments it would be cheaper to install the air conditioning initially, rather than try to put it in later. They also heard the state would reimburse over 60 percent of the costs for the air conditioning.

Spoffard said the state reimbursement was still an option, if another town meeting voted to inject the extra $125,000 into the budget.

Greenbush consultant to come on board

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A consultant is about to be hired to measure things people cannot see. The "future shock" expert will project air quality, noise and vibrations in Cohasset after the Greenbush train comes to town. Thomas Gruber, the Chairman of the committee formed to negotiate with the MBTA over Greenbush, confirmed Wednesday his panel is ready to announce the contract award. Gruber meets today with Town Manager Mark Haddad for a pre-award conference. The consultant will be named afterwards.

Town meeting appropriated $15,000 from surplus revenue to pay for a consultant for the mitigation committee.

Gruber and the rest of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee last week mulled over the air, noise and vibration issues. Before their upcoming negotiations with the T, the panel wanted to be certain they understood how best to protect the public. They particularly worry about the people who live closest to the right of way where the tracks will be laid. They are bringing on the consultant to help deal with the science and engineering. Both can be complicated.

For instance, Gruber said the T's estimates of vibration sounded flawed. The T made an estimate for the entire town after testing only one spot of ground in the Osgood School parking lot. It is sand and gravel. According to Gruber, the one spot did not reflect a true picture of the geology which is mostly ledge, not sand.

The T made an estimate for the entire town after testing only one spot of ground in the Osgood School parking lot. It is sand and gravel. According to mitigation committee Chairman Tom Gruber, the one spot did not reflect a true picture of the geology which is mostly ledge, not sand.

Gruber said by testing only the Osgood parking lot, the T effectively minimized the vibration the train will bring. Simply put, the train will make the ground shake harder when it travels over tracks built on rock. Greenbush will run over rock when it goes through the village just beyond the Strawberry Parfait at Pleasant Street. The worst section of track comes near the Hingham line around the Glastonbury Abbey. Conversely, the area around Osgood will muffle the pounding because sand and gravel absorb energy.

"We should go back to the T and tell them. You picked the most benign spot in the whole town. We think you made a lousy choice," Gruber said. He also offered some doubts about the reliability of the rest of the T's conclusions.

"Somehow I'd like to know more about how we can protect ourselves," said Gruber. The committee also made a list of other questions for the expert. Some were theoretical and dealt with the quality of choices the T was offering the town.

"Is the T giving us a full palette of choices?" Gruber queried. As selectwoman Diane Sullivan put it, the committee will ask the consultant one basic question—"Are we missing anything?" After much discussion of the theoretical questions, the panel turned to specifics. They decided to add the following questions to the consultant's assignment.

- The T has stated it will install rubber vibration mats under the tracks and up to 75 feet away from each side of the tracks to protect homeowners from vibrations. The committee wants to know if the mats should be installed even farther away from the tracks. Homes built on ledge are expected to get the brunt of the shockwaves, and the 75 foot border seemed too short to offer protection.
- The T might have underestimated the area that will be rocked when the train blows the horns and whistles. According to former selectman Peter Pratt who sat in for the Greenbush meeting, the town paid for a report which calculated the "sonic cone" around the train when the whistles blast. Pratt said the cone looked "much wider than the T previously disclosed." He questioned the impact on the historic section of town in particular..

Gruber said the consultant will sit in during upcoming negotiations with the T. The commitment is to assist the committee at three meetings with the T.

Currently, the T and the committee have reached another impasse over the James Brook flood control project. State Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, sent the T a letter on Cohasset's behalf. In the letter, Sullivan asked the T to "enlighten" him about the status of the James Brook issue.

If there are family members who have attended Osgood for three generations (i.e., grandfather, father, daughter), please submit photos as a group for the Osgood family tree.

Submit photos at the drop off box (office) at Joseph Osgood School. Large envelopes will be supplied for you, along with a simple form to be filled out, so that photos may be returned to you. The deadline is Friday, May 15.

For more information, call Derry Schwantner at 383-2529 or Margot Cheel at 383-9184. For more information about the family tree, call Rose Collins at 383-0760.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Lamberts Lane turnaround is topic

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to look into using the country club access road for a school bus turnaround on Lamberts Lane. The DPW has marked the end of Lamberts Lane for a potential turnaround location — the paving of which would cost about $15,000. But before Haddad asks the neighborhood and country club what they think of that site, selectmen want to see if the bus could simply back up into the access road to change direction.

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches

We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

RELAY FOR LIFE WALK

May 29-30 are two days that will be big ones around town, those are the dates that the Relay for Life will take place. Relay teams representing corporations. clubs, hospitals, churches, neighborhoods and families will join the race to beat cancer by walking, strolling or running around the Alumni Field Track in half-hour shifts in order to keep one member of each team on the track throughout the 24 hours. Teams camp out in tents around the track, enjoying the festive atmosphere. Funds raised will support the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education and service to patients and their families. Last year this event raised $27,000, all of which went locally! To get involved: 1) organize a team; 2) put together your team of 8-15 (or more) runners and walkers; 3) raise your team's registration fee and additional contributions. Begin by making your own contribution, then seek sponsorships from the people who can help you meet your goal. Sponsorships are not pledged per mile, but as a single amount; 4) Come to the track and get ready for fun! Each team sends members to walk or run relay-fashion around the track for the full 24 hours.. And don't forget your tents, food and sleeping bags so you won't miss the action! Also, sponsor a luminaria for a contribution of $5 or more! You can help light the night in memory or in honor of someone you love, their name will be placed on one of the lights. A ceremony dedicating the luminaria will take place at 9:00 p.m. on May 29, 1997. Or you can volunteer for the event before during or after—people are needed for a variety of tasks, so all talents are welcomed. For your information, they have 12 confirmed teams at this writing, they have a pancake breakfast on Saturday, and lots of new volunteers! Questions or concerns? BRANDNEW GRANDDAUGHTER

Have you noticed that our Chief of Police is wearing a bigger smile than usual these days? There sure is a reason! He and Jackie are grandparents!! Their granddaughter's name is Kassandra Jacquelyn Dobson; Kassandra's mom and dad are Diane and Troy Dobson of 5 Truman Ave. in Plymouth. Kassandra was born on January 22, at 7:57 a.m., and weighed 6 pounds 12 ounces. Besides Brian, Jackie, Diane and Troy to love her, she has Kathleen Noonan (her maternal grandmother) and David and Jackie Dobson (her paternal grandparents). That's a lot of love! We wish all of you the best, and cannot wait to see that little bundle of joy "around town".

ExCel lecture is April 25

CYC and the Sailing Club present the third annual ExCeL lecture Saturday, April 25, at 8 p.m. at Walton Rogers Hall, St. Stephen's Church.

Lory Newmyer and Ed McCabe of the Hull Lifesaving Museum will share insights and anecdotes about the turn-of-the-century lifesavers of Hull and Cohasset and what can be learned from them today. An entertaining slide show and lecture will incorporate evocative historical images from the museum's collection juxtaposed with photographs from the youth rowing and job-training programs.

All proceeds will benefit the ExCeL Alternate School Program at Cohasset High School. The ExCeL (Experimental Center for Learning) program is an interdisciplinary accredited program for students in grades 10 to 12 offering unique marine experimental activities and traditional coursework in science, social studies and English. Students may enroll in the program for one, two or three years. Course work includes field studies and lab work in fundamental principles of oceanography, physical science, navigation, aquatic environmental science and nautical science. Outdoor activities include learning to crew and care for a traditional pulling boat. Students also learn the fundamentals of boat building by working on current wooden boat projects.

This is the third year that the Cohasset Yacht Club has presented an illustrated slide cruising lecture open to the public to benefit the ExCeL program. This year, the club welcomes the participation of the Sailing Club. Advance reservations may be made by telephone before April 20 by calling Jim Hamilton at 383-9834 for reserved tickets, $8 for adults and $4 for students under 18. Unreserved tickets at the door will cost $10 for adults and $5 for students under 18. Refreshments will be served.

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

When we were seeking recipes years ago, Jean (MacDonald) Doble and I often compared recipes—both of our dads (Roy MacDonald and Fred Troy) loved to sample our dishes, then claim them as their own! This recipe is one that they both claimed as their own, and to this day, Jean and I aren't sure which one presented it to us! All we know is that it is yummy, and that we always double the batch as all who try it love it! So, save that Easter ham bone, and read on—

PUREE OF PEA SOUP

1 cup quick cooking dried split peas
2 tablespoons bacon fat
1 onion minced 1 clove garlic, minced
1 small bay leaf
1 carrot, minced
1/4 teaspoon sage
1 1/2 quarts soup stock (or canned chicken broth)
1 ham bone
1/2 teaspoon sugar cooked ham
2 dashes Tabasco sauce
salt, pepper

Put fat, onion, garlic, carrot, bay leaf and sage in pot; sauté until onion turns yellow, add peas and stock. Add bone and bring to a boil, simmer two hours. Remove bone and force soup through strainer; add ham and seasonings. You will love it!!

With your soup, try this bread recipe that I found recently (sorry, I cannot give proper credit—I don't remember where I found it).

ZESTY CHEESE BREAD

1 10-ounce can Pillsbury Refrigerated All Ready Pizza Crust
1 4.5-ounce can Old El Paso Chopped Green Chilies, drained
1/2 cup shredded sharp cheddar cheese cup shredded hot pepper Monterey Jack cheese
1/4 tsp. garlic powder

Move oven rack to highest position. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Spray cookie sheet with non-stick cooking spray. Place unrolled sough on cookie sheet. Starting at center, press out dough with hands to 14-by-five inch rectangle. Sprinkle chilies, cheeses over dough to within 1/2 inch of long sides. Bring long sides up over cheese; pinch along center to seal. Then pinch ends to seal. Sprinkle with garlic powder. Bake 15-20 minutes or until golden brown. Cool 15 minutes. Slice; serve warm. Serves 10.

The cynics among us probably won't agree — but government can work, albeit slowly..

Last week Acting Governor Paul Cellucci signed a bill which will ultimately benefit residents in Hingham, Hull and north Cohasset who have been saddled with a huge water rate hike since September 1996.

North Cohasset is served by Massachusetts-American Water Company, a private company that upgraded its treatment plant in Hingham in order to comply with the rigid water quality standards mandated by the Federal Safe Drinking Water Act of 1993.

The cost of the $40 million plant was passed on to Mass-American customers who saw an average annual increase of $422 per household — $341 of that for capital costs of constructing the new plant and $81 for increased operating costs.

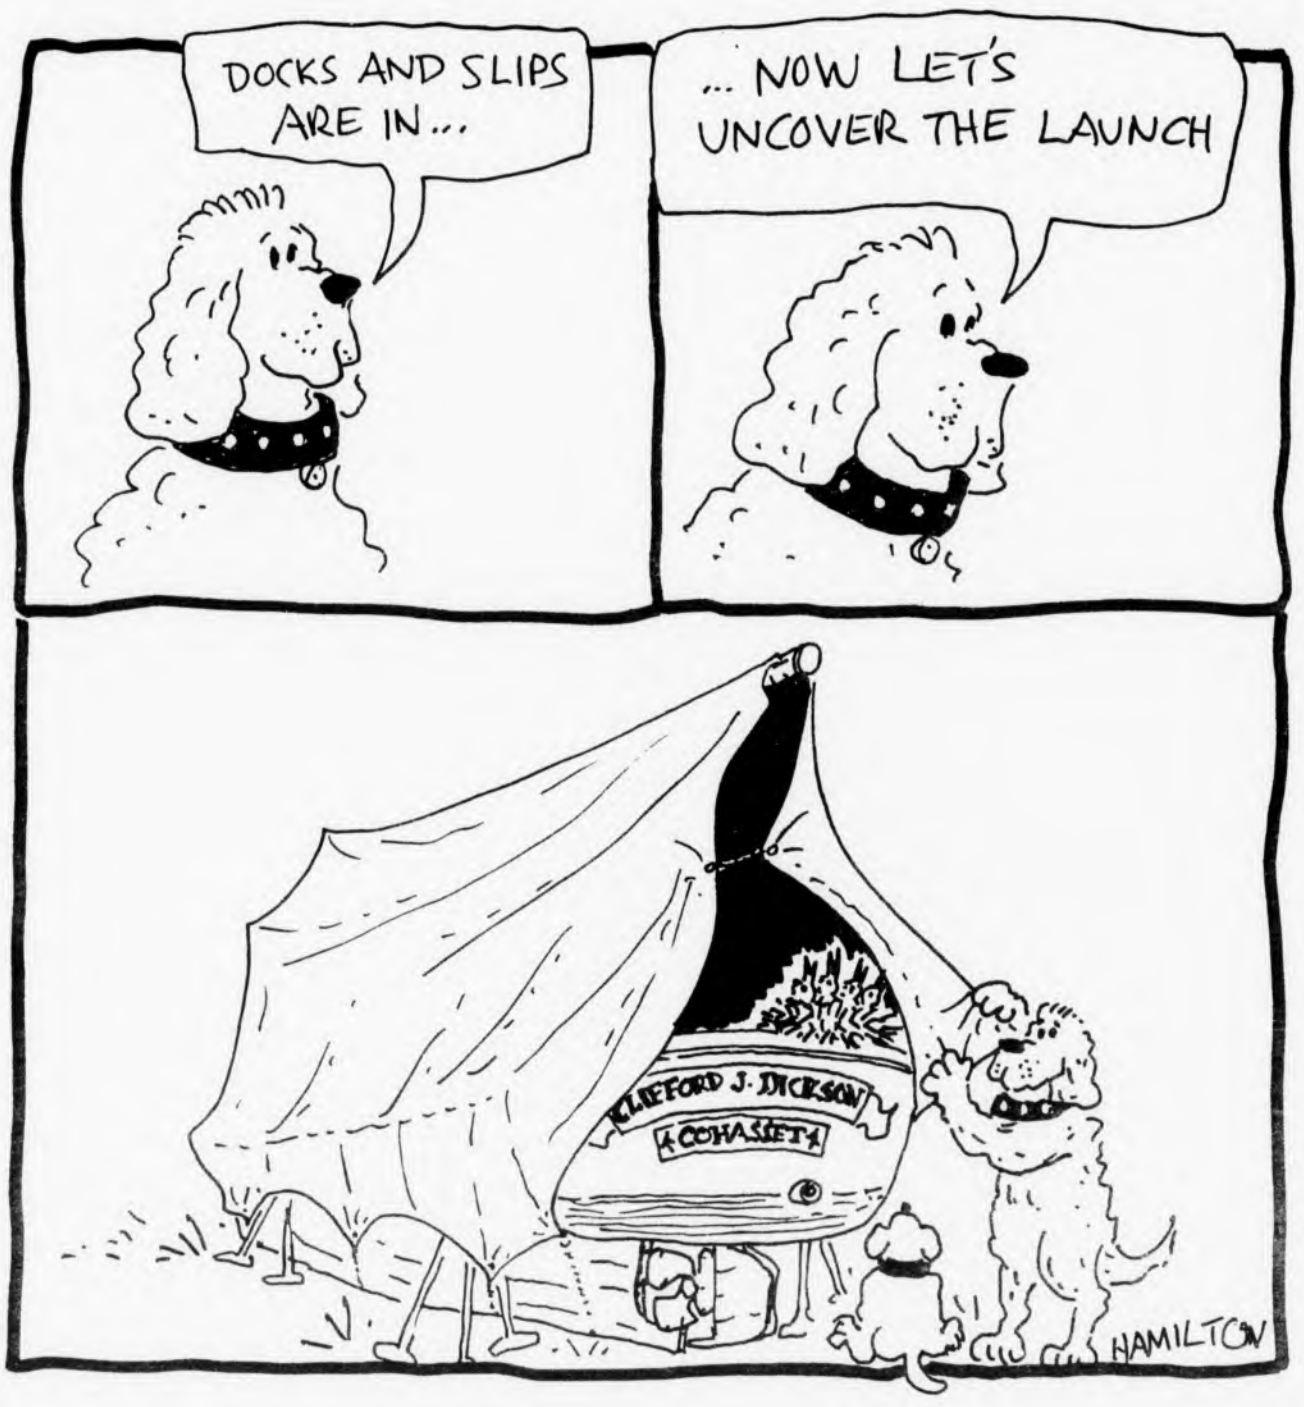
Water bills in Hingham, Hull and north Cohasset are twice the average of those in neighboring towns.

At first it looked as though federal legislation under the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1996 came too late for north Cohasset. In August, 1996, a Drinking Water Revolving Fund, to be administered through the states, was established to help water suppliers constructing plants to comply with the new federal standards. Unfortunately the law did not include language for completed projects.

About the same time, burgeoning water bills started arriving in mailboxes outraging many citizens who called and wrote our local legislators. A large group even staged a protest march on the Statehouse.

As the ripples of discontent spread throughout town — the cries of the people were head loudly and clearly on Beacon Hill.

There state Sen. Robert Hedlund, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and some town representatives met with then Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci, who promised to help find an answer for our strapped communities.



What followed was nearly 16 months of "legislative back-'n-forth" where a bill — having the state pick up where the federal government left off by allowing "grandfathered" projects like Mass-American's — shepherded through by Sen. Hedlund traveled from committee to committee finally landing on the governor's desk on April 9.

"The groundwork for water rate relief has finally been laid," Sen. Hedlund said. "Although it will be several months before all the details are worked out, the water customers of Hingham, Hull and north Cohasset won't be staring at a mirage any longer.

"Relief is on its way."

Thanks to those angry citizens who made their voices heard and to our legislators who listened — Mass-American customers can now be grateful not only for cleaner water but for fairer bills.

Distasteful water tank sludge

To the Editor:

Our drinking water sits on a bed of sludge several feet thick in the bottom of the tank on Bear Hill; sludge that should have been cleaned out years ago but can't be done without prejudicing fire protection until a second tank is operational. Whenever the sludge is disturbed, some of it enters our drinking water. It may not be dangerous to our health, but it sure is distasteful.

Thanks to the campaign to locate the intended second tank on Scituate Hill (on land not owned by the town) instead of near the existing tank on town land on Bear Hill, and the refusal of the Zoning Hoard of Appeals to grant a height variance for the Bear Hill location, we had already been condemned before the March town meeting to another year of drinking water that sits on sludge.

The foolish vote at town meeting on Saturday, March 28 further delays the ability of the Water Commission to take effective action, and thus we are all held hostage indefinitely to the distasteful sludge.

Taking land by eminent domain can be a lengthy process. Delays cost money; the cost of nearly everything is increasing, not decreasing, with time. A Scituate Hill location may be reclassified as residential, if a potential developer has his way, and thus require a height variance that we have no assurance that the ZBA will grant. Not only will a Scituate Hill location increase the cost by at least $200,000 and delay our relief from sludge, but it may get the town embroiled in yet another legal mess.

It's been argued that the hydraulics of the Scituate Hill site are significantly better, but I've enough experience with hydraulic engineering to conclude otherwise. And it was disingenuous to suggest that the $200,000 could be saved by a cheaper tank on Scituate Hill than the tank proposed for Bear Hill; either location should use the same type and quality of tank.

The only argument against Bear Hill that has any merit is the objections of some of the abutters. Yet a new tank can be screened so as to be unobtrusive. It probably would be more visible from my house than from house lots immediately abutting the town land, but I'd prefer the sludge matter resolved earlier and the tank acquired at less cost by using Bear Hill. Some of us have to live near schools, police and fire stations, water treatment plants, etc. So what is so unbearable about a water tank, and why shouldn't a height variance be granted for the benefit of the community as a whole? The ZBA should have been less concerned with protection of its turf and more concerned with the community's needs.

Delays hold us all hostage to sludge-tainted water, as well as further adding to our tax burden.

Some hard facts about drugs and alcohol

District Attorney Locke is guest at D&A meeting

By Stacey K. Powers
CORRESPONDENT

"There are drugs in New England — don't let anyone fool you." Norfolk County District Attorney Jeffrey Locke told members of the community at the April 8 meeting of the Drug and Alcohol Committee.

According to Locke, heroin - once considered a "dirty" drug of the 60s and 70s - has evolved into a social drug that has created a new community of addicts due in part to its current purity and its accessibility as a drug that can be snorted. Hence, the past six years have seen an alarming increase in heroin in the metro Boston area where dealers are making a larger profit from selling heroin versus cocaine, he said.

Marijuana can be a stepping stone to other drugs, Locke said.

He said there is an "alarming number of students who have admitted to using marijuana" through school surveys. He also pointed out that "there are very few cocaine and heroin uses who didn't start out using marijuana first."

Through a new advisory board, Locke's office also works with local police and reviews cases where it is often necessary for the district attorney's office and the local police to work as a team by sending in undercover agents to help solve larger drug problems in small communities. Police chiefs serve as advisory board members and he pointed out that Cohasset's own Brian Noonan was the first chief of police to be appointed to the task force advisory board.

"Drug use among juveniles is now starting around age 12," Locke said. "Between 1992 and 1996, we saw a 400% increase in marijuana-related drug cases brought to the district court for juveniles. This is a problem in Norfolk county we have to address."

In 1996, a juvenile court department was created separate from the district court - an indication of the "very focused, very concentrated commitment to juvenile crime that will send out the message to kids that this is serious and you are accountable," Locke said. One courthouse will be located at a yet to be determined location in Quincy and one in Dedham.

DIVERSION PROGRAM

Within the court structure, a diversion program was created that allows first time offenders under the age of 17 who have either been accused of disturbing the peace, minor in possession of alcohol or a small amount of drugs, to divert out of court. This would allow the minor to avoid a record and skip the juvenile process in the courtroom. The diversion program also affords the court an opportunity to examine the life of the minor in a clinical setting by interviewing the child and the parents as well as looking at various aspects of their school life.

If a diversion program is agreed upon, a formal contract is then drawn up between the court, the minor and the minor's parents that, among other things, imposes a curfew, participation in a drug and alcohol program, homework sessions and addressing the criminal issue. Mandatory community service is also imposed serving to teach the child that the offense he or she has committed is an offense against the community in which they live and as a result, the service performed is treated as a public statement of apology.

"As of the end of February we have had 48 juvenile diversion cases. 43 have managed to stay in the program and five have violated their contract for various reasons but the one heard most often is that it was too hard."

Locke also said that "parents often thank us for help in dealing with a problem child" and that "we are reaching first time offenders before they become caught up in a significant repeat offender pattern."

Locke's office has also created what he calls a "Memo of Understanding"(MOU) between schools, the police, court personnel and his office that works in two ways to combat juvenile crime. First, it creates a protocol for how the district deals with school issues related to serious violence, drug possession and possession of weapons. In these incidents, the school immediately involves the police, the police immediately investigate and the district attorney's office prioritizes to speed the case through the system. The school is treated as a victim and counseled on how to handle the student following release. Second, it establishes a regular dialogue, or roundtable between the school personnel in charge of discipline and the assistant district attorney in charge of prosecuting the case.

"Drug use among juveniles is now starting around age 12. Between 1992 and 1996, we saw a 400% increase in marijuana-related drug cases brought to the district court for juveniles. This is a problem in Norfolk county we have to address."

— DISTRICT ATTORNEY JEFFREY LOCKE

"Historically, these types of cases have been solved without meaningful treatment of the problem because all of the people involved were not aware of the full context of the situation in the child's life," Locke said. Currently, Cohasset is in discussions about getting involved with the MOU, along with seven other local communities which are working on signing agreements.

Regarding alcohol use among teenagers, Locke noted that "every community in Norfolk County is grappling with a teen alcohol problem" and that in regards to handling it, there may not be any one right approach. His office has established a safe prom lecture series that talks with kids about the dangers of drinking and driving, a hot topic around the fast approaching prom and graduation season.

"In 1996, 7,738 kids died between the ages of 16 and 20 in alcohol-related vehicular homicides - the single largest age group for alcohol-related deaths. Not one of them thought it was going to happen to them," he said.

Last year, Locke said the lecture series reached around 2,000 students and the greatest message they tried to get across was that "the campus you don't want to find yourself on after graduation is the MCI/Norfolk campus." According to Locke, there is no tougher audience to reach than the 16-18 year olds, whom he tells "you don't want to go to the parents of your best friend to say sorry for killing their son or daughter."

BINGE DRINKING

Binge drinking is also another problem among teenagers.

"It's not uncommon to find kids with two,- two-and-one-half gallon jugs of hard liquor not just beer," said Chief Noonan.

"There are more pressures such as homework and sports and other pressures facing teens today than there were years ago," commented Locke. "Kids want to drink with the same intense, driven way they do everything else and we need to tell them to relax and slow down."

Cohasset High School Principal Curtis Collins commented that he has grown cynical about the teenage drinking problem noting that "in my 20 years as a high school administrator, teenage alcohol consumption has become culturally accepted and this creates enormous problems."

Asked by one citizen how to break down parental denial of this problem, Locke responded that "there are many ways including roundtable concept of people dealing with the problem and in some communities it works to lock kids up to confront the reality of the situation and sending a message to parents that this type of behavior won't be tolerated instead of just taking them home."

One mother suggested that perhaps parents need to be educated at the same time that their kids are to change the parental attitudes.

Concerned citizen Karen Hettstrom said that she sees a "pack mentality" of kids grouping against one or two others.

"They are trying to be social, which is so important at this age, but how can they interact without participating? Kids are drowning alone and we must come together as a community and stop isolating kids but it must start with parents backing up their kids." She also noted that there were not many parents attending the meeting. "That says that parents are not supporting their kids."

More than 400 invitations to the meeting were sent out resulting in a turn out of about 50 people.

Work on teen garage to get underway Saturday

By Lisa Campenella
CORRESPONDENT

The first step to a new teen center at the DPW garage begins Saturday when volunteers will begin gutting the building.

Led by Cohasset High School junior Tony Bramblett, volunteers are needed Saturday, Sunday and Monday to "bring heavy tools" and help get the garage ready for renovations into the teen center.

"Rob the shed," Bramblett said Tuesday night during the Youth Resources Committee meeting when he gave an update about the progress of the proposal initiated last fall.

Design plans are in the process, Bramblett said and are still open for debate. What has been decided is that the space will be made available for a teen area and what is definitely needed is framing for an office, two bathrooms, a staging area and a snack bar.

Bramblett said further activities and plans will be decided in the future by volunteers and high school students. What is needed this weekend is the tearing down of existing office space and bathrooms, ripping out old insulation and old electrical wires. "It needs to be stripped down to just the walls and the ceiling," he said.

He has suggested the space be used for teens to watch movies on a projection television, listen to live bands performed by peers and have a snack bar to help bring funds into the center to begin its trip to self-sufficiency.

"Our goal is to have all our activities and programs to be self-sufficient."

— JACK WORLEY, RECREATION DIRECTOR.

"Our goal is to have all our activities and programs to be self-sufficient," Recreation Director and Youth Resources Chairman Jack Worley said.

Several issues were discussed including the fate of the current Teen Center housed in the Independence Building, liability and costs for both sites and who will have access to the new center.

According to committee member Rose Collins, who is also president of the current Teen Center board, rumors flew around town that the current center would close its doors immediately. However, until the so-called "Garage" is complete, the Independence Hall site will remain open to the youths who currently participate in activities.

What will take place regarding the current center is that come July 1, when the new fiscal year begins, the Teen Center board and the Teen Center financial accounts will dissolve and be incorporated under the Youth Resources committee.

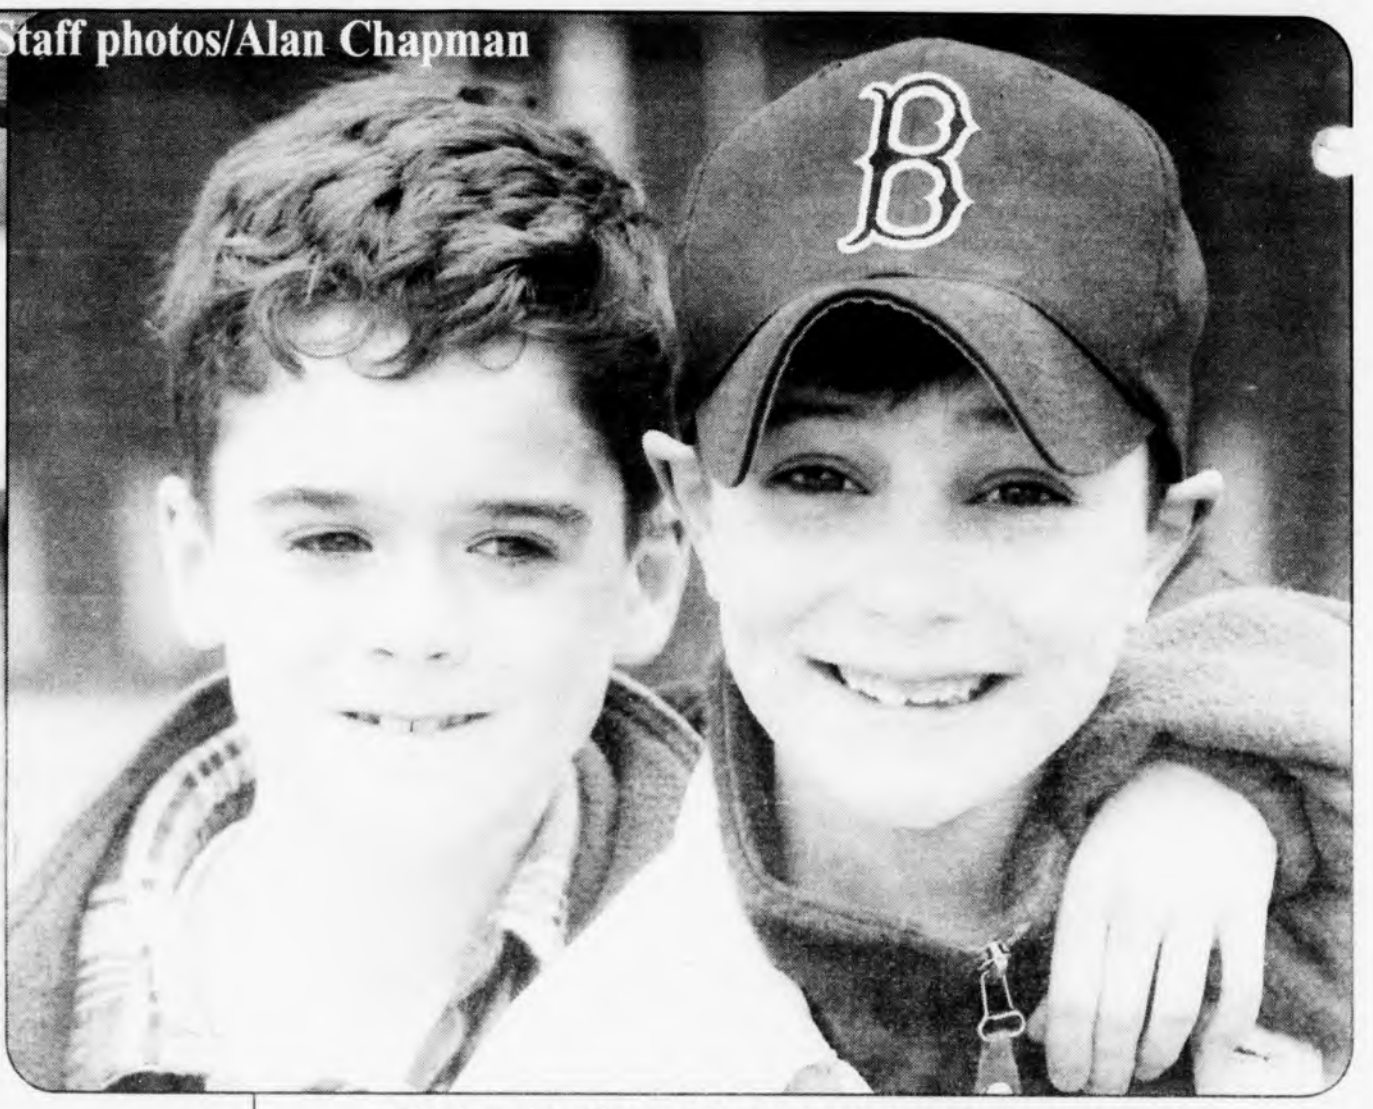
Attending the meeting, Selectman Ronnie McMorris, questioned the old center's finances and insurance costs and who would be paying the bills for the non-profit organization begun about three-years ago.

Teen Center board member Betsy Connolly said the Teen Center's liability insurance is paid up until July 1 and a few miscellaneous bills, such as electric and cable, remain unpaid.

Collins said because the Youth Resources committee is now the central governing body for youth activities within town, all funds from fund-raising activities will go into the same pot for all activities and will eliminate any confusion around town as to which organization people are donating money to.

"When people see me coming they go the other way," Collins said, noting her numerous fundraising activities for the many groups in town becomes confusing to residents.

Since funds will be handled by a central committee rather than two or three different ones, all bills will be paid on an as-needed basis, including the remaining bills for Independence Hall, Collins said.



McMorris also pointed out, due to liability issues, the committee would need to have town supervisors chaperoning events at the new "Garage" because it would be a town-run facility unlike the Teen Center. Currently, the Teen Center's activities are supervised by volunteers. The town has earmarked $15,000 to fund a part-time, year-round youth resources coordinator to supervise activities at the "Garage," which will take care of supervisory issues, members said.

A lingering question remains as to what age groups will have use of the garage. The current Teen Center predominantly services seventh- and eighth-graders, but the idea for the Garage is intended to give high school-aged teens a space to "hang-out." However, activities will be planned for the younger teens and it will remain to be seen if the older children and the younger children will be able to handle themselves appropriately and together.

"It's really run by the kids and what transpires is up to them," Collins said, adding she, as a parent has misgivings about the younger children mingling with the older ones but has faith the teens can make it work.

Defining limits for kids

The Cohassett PSO presents "Setting Firm Limits - Dealing with Attitude", with Barbara Capaldo, M.Ed. Capaldo from the Insight Education Center for parents and teachers.

Could you use a little advice about successfully disciplining and defining limits for your children? Need some advice to deal constructively with the "attitude"? Then, come join us for a lively, interactive session presenting ideas applicable to children of all ages. Ms. Capaldo is a counselor, trainer, and consultant in the areas of parenting, child behavior and classroom management. She is the founder and Executive Director of Insight Education Center in Hanover. Bring your questions and gain some insight. Share your own experiences. Hear what other parents are doing. Let's learn together!

This session will be held Tuesday, April 28 from 7 p.m. until 9 p.m. at the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

Post-prom party

The first annual Post-Prom All-Night Party will be held at Cohasset High School on June 3. The Prom will be held at the Marriott Long Warf in Boston. After after the Prom the students will return to CHS for a night of FUN. A Disc Jockey, a casino, and a breakfast are some of the events that are being planned.

An inclusive, chemical free All-Night Party for seniors has been very successful in many neighboring towns, including Hingham, Scituate, Hanover, and Marshfield. Local police and organizations strongly support the idea in these towns as the All-Night affair takes what may be a worrisome night and turns it into a safe sand fun experience for prom-goers.

The ticket price will be $30 per attendee. Student tickets will not cover the entire expenses for the evening. We need your donations to make this event a success.

Please help support this great event and send your donation to: Cohasset Post Prom Party, 16 Woodland Drive, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Health Board Notes

This article is the first of what we hope to be a regular bi-weekly column. It will give information of interest on recent activities by the board, and comments on issues relevant to the health of Cohasset citizens.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE BICENTENNIAL

On Tuesday April 7 the US Public Health Service (PHS) held a bicentennial service at the Constitution Wharf in Boston which Joe Godzik, your health officer, and Steve Bobo, newly elected member, attended. The service was to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the US PHS.

The service traces its roots back to a 1798 act of congress which established a prepaid hospital service for merchant seamen. That law led to the creation of the Marine Hospital Service forerunner of the PHS. David Sacher, Surgeon General, wearing the public health service uniform, a naval uniform with the PHS logo, spoke about the mission and accomplishments of the PHS.

The ceremony was attended by numerous health officials throughout New England; dedicated officials who labor under a widely misperceived notion of the duties and responsibilities of health boards. A survey, handout at the meeting showed that the public somehow links public health to hot button political issues like universal health care, Medicaid, and social security.

In reality, the PHS and its local counterparts have an extremely broad spectrum of grass roots responsibilities from health education to domestic violence to food and nutrition and environmental oversight and many other concerns affecting the overall health of citizens.

GRANTS

While schmoozing with the officials at the PHS ceremony, there was time to talk to several state officials about grants for Cohasset issues. Specifically, there are two state grant requests for which proposals are in preparation.

The first is called Communities Linked by Water which will seek to broaden the currently voted and funded study of Little Harbor to the entire Cohasset watershed. If approved for State funding, this will give us considerably better information about any health threats from leachates and wastewater flows within the town.

The second is a 'Planning for Growth' grant program for which we planning to write a grant request to look into incentives for facilitating wastewater treatment in Cohasset.

LOANS

The Board of Health office at Town hall has a handout which explains the state's loan program for septic system upgrades. The state has made arrangements with banks to provide low interest loans up to $25,000 depending on eligibility, for septic system repairs.

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

SPORTS

Stansell and Buckley captain impressive ski season

Participants from the Cohasset High School Varsity Ski Team recently competed yet another successful season in the Mass Bay Ski League East. Even though El Nino hindered snowfall, Blue Hills Ski Area managed to keep their slopes open for the competitions. However, it did take an extended amount of time to prepare the trails with manmade snow. The team waited patiently and then rallied to make it to Blue Hills as much as possible.

The Mass Bay Ski League East consists of 12 schools including Waltham, Fontbonne, Xaverian, Newton North, Newton South, Easton, Milton, Dover-Sherbourne, Wellesley, Westwood, Brookline and Cohasset. This league is then divided into small school and large school divisions, Cohasset falling in the small school category. Overall, the boys' team finished in fifth place for the season, while the girls came in fourth position.

With a team of 16 competitors, many of these students were first-time racers. These included seniors Tom Leahy, Andrew Ross, and sophomores Andrew McAullife, Greg O'Keefe, Stephan Vanderweil, Pete Minnar, and freshmen Jeff Scribner and Nick Parisi. Valiant efforts were also contributed by John Kasemyer, Mark Kupsc, Aaron Sawchuk, as well as James and Justin "double trouble" Drybanski.

Although middle school competitors were not allowed to compete in official races, eighth graders David Krueger and Connor Avery also trained with the team. By placing high enough, points could be attained after each race.

Racers Josh Flanagan, Greg O'Keefe, Rob Buckley and Andrew McAullife got points for the boys' team. On the girls' team, Clara Sceery, Maggie O'Connor, Jackie Kahn, Caitlin Stansell, Susan Dane and Lydia Guild acquired points as well.

Six of these competitors also went on to compete in the Bay State Games, which were held at Jiminy Peak in western Massachusetts.

Senior J. Robert Buckley, along with sophomore Caitlin Stansell, lead the teams as captains. These two racers qualified for the Mt. Dew Finals which were held on April 4. Both finished with silver medals at Black Mountain Ski Area in NH.

At Blue Hills, Rob finished 10th in the small school league and Caitlin came in first. As a result, they both qualified for the State Championships which were held at Berkshire East, in Claremont, MA.

At this event, with around 150 participants, Rob ended up finishing 96th in the GS, and 101st place for the slalom. Caitlin finished 31st in the GS and 36th in the slalom. These two students will be traveling to Mt. Hood, Ore., to train during the summer season as well.

Overall, the team ended with a successful season and look forward to the future in racing.

Marathon tradition continues for Cohasset runner

102nd Boston Marathon is this Monday

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

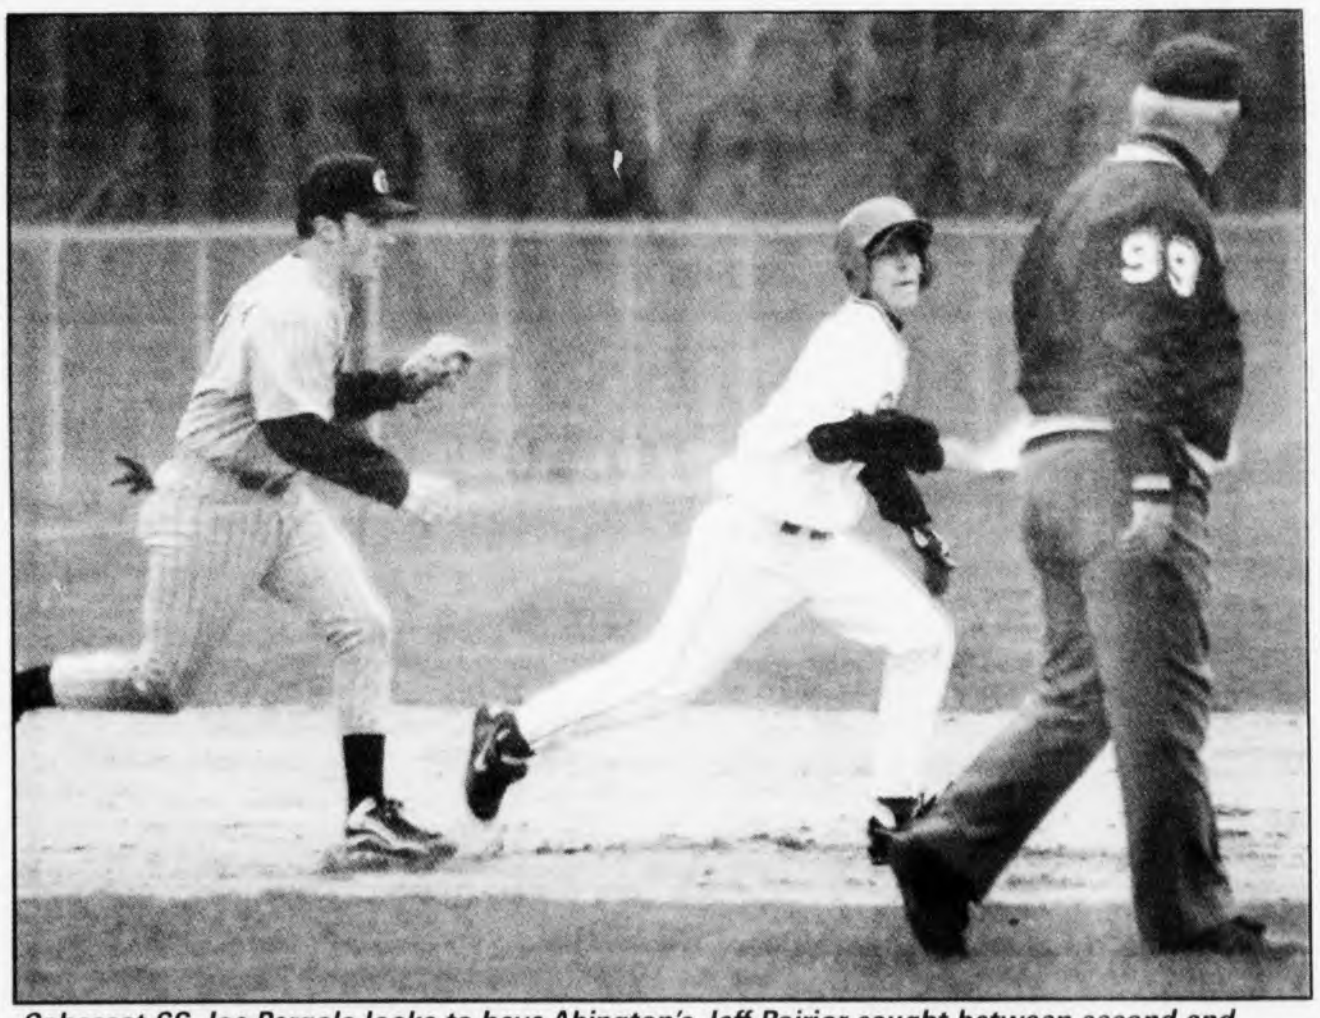
Ladies and gentlemen, start your sneakers!

At noon on Monday, thousands of runners, including many from the South Shore, will take off from the starting line in Hopkinton for the running of the 102nd Boston Marathon, the world's preeminent 26.2 mile road race.

A good portion of the runners, both official entrants and unregistered 'bandit' runners, will complete the race in downtown Boston later that afternoon.

Along the way, these runners will pass several hundred thousands fans who have lined the scenic 26.2 mile course that winds through Wellesley, Newton and eventually Boston.

However, many of those who trained for the last six months in preparation for the race, won't go the distance.



But no matter what happens, the pageantry and history of the Boston Marathon will make Monday's race something special.

For Cohasset's Richard Kennedy, Boston is not really a race. It's more like a beloved family tradition that's been passed from one generation to the next.

Kennedy has run in the race for 13 of the last 14 years. The one marathon he did was in the mid-80s was for an acceptable reason. He was in the hospital for the birth of his son Tyler.

"I can still remember being five-years-old and my parents taking me and my seven brothers and sisters into Coolidge Corner to see the Boston Marathon," said

Batmen head into vacation at 3-3

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Despite inconsistent play which has at times been costly, the Cohasset Skippers varsity baseball team has quietly compiled a 3-3 record in the South Shore League.

Sandwiched between two key wins, Cohasset dropped an ugly one to Norwell. However, the team ended last week with a coasting 10-4 win over Abington and stunned Rockland Tuesday with a 9-7 victory.

With aces Greg Taylor and Joe Pergola unable to pitch an inning, Coach Bob Knurek has been forced to nearly exhaust his options for hurlers. However, the Skippers are two wins ahead of where league experts had predicted them, so it's hard for anyone to complain.

Following their important win over Carver Tuesday last week, Cohasset hosted the Abington Green Wave Thursday. Behind the masterful hurling of Ben Ketchum, the Skippers played perhaps their best all-around game of the year. Taylor exploded with a three-for-four day at the plate and senior captain Pat Hurley continued his phenomenal season at the bat, stroking the ball at an even .500 over the first six games.

Al Schwerin was a wall at third and Sean Parkinson, Cohasset's rapidly improving backstop, delivered a solid game behind the dish.

The Norwell game was a different story. Little seemed to go right for the visiting Skippers as Ketchum, pitching only four days after his seven inning gem against Abington, didn't have his best stuff.

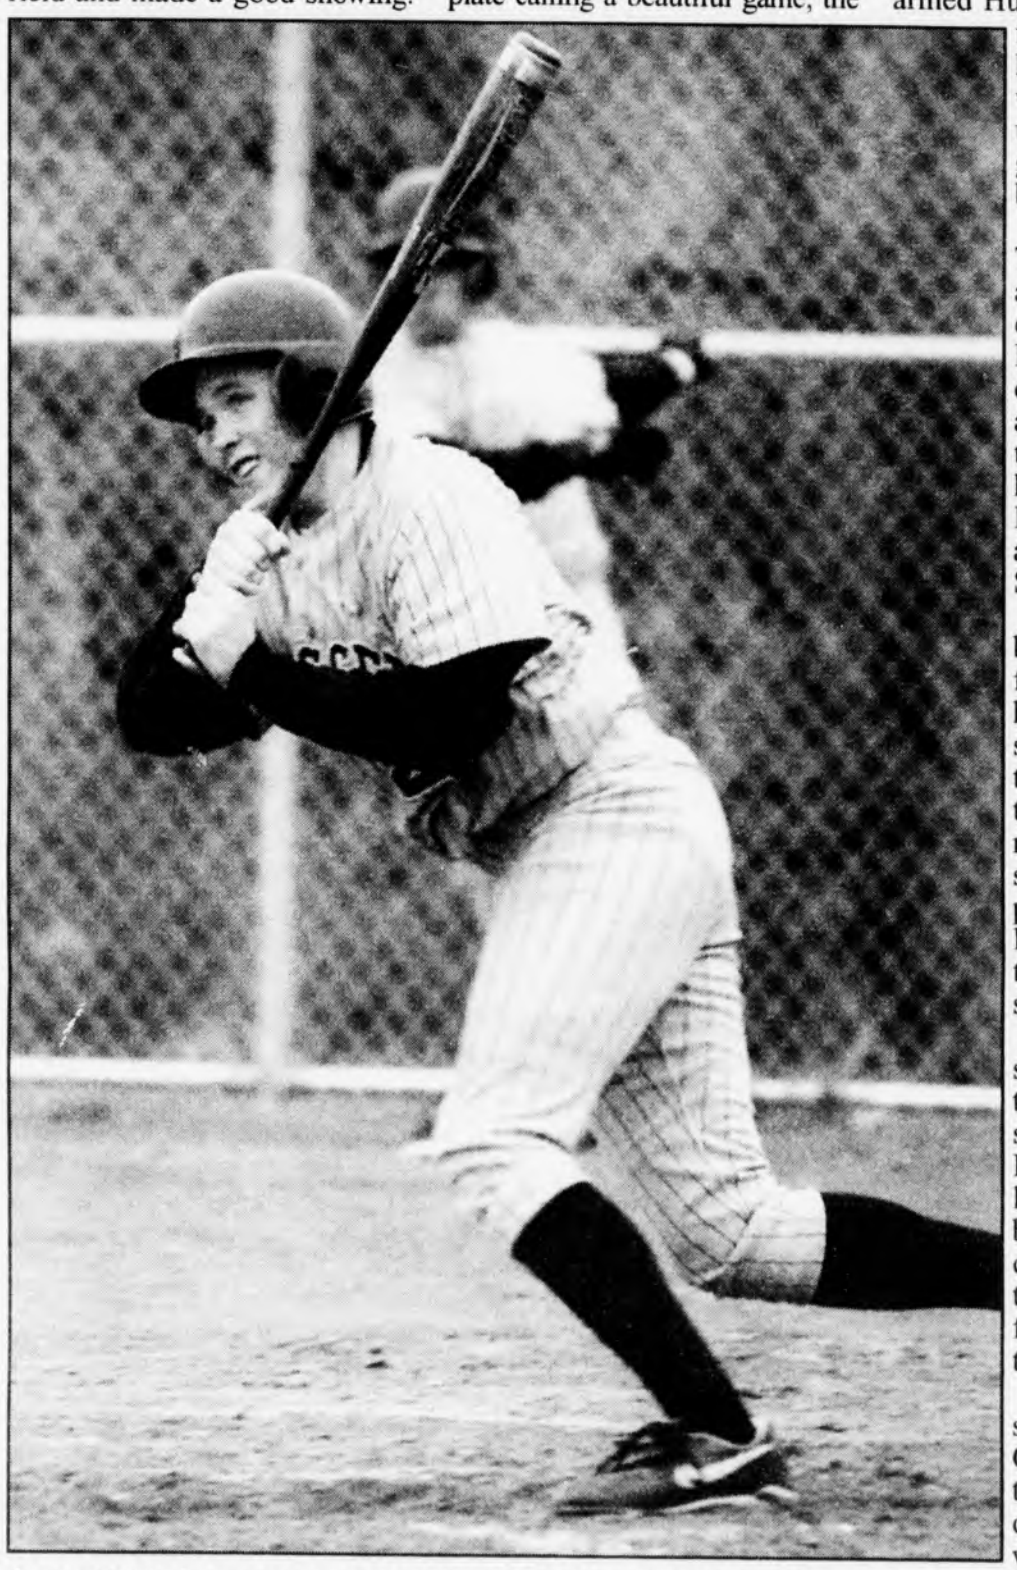
Hurley did his best in relief, showing a gorgeous pick-off move to third base, which nabbed an overeager base-runner, but the Skippers couldn't stay close and fell 12-2 to the Clippers.

Cohasset utilityman Dan Mulligan made his varsity debut in right field and made a good showing. Superb fielding by Norwell and timely, rarely well-struck hits, were the order of the day for the home team.

After the loss to Norwell, a game which the Skippers had counted on having in their tournament quest, the Boys in Blue attacked Rockland with vigor. Hopping all over the Bulldogs' number-two starter, Cohasset posted nine runs in six turns at bat.

Jim O'Sullivan took the mound for the full seven and let his teammates do the work with their gloves. With Parkinson behind the plate calling a beautiful game, the Bulldogs couldn't solve a blend of fastballs, knucklers, curves and changes.

Rockland seemed to come alive briefly in the fifth, tallying five runs and tying the game at seven but often appeared as if they were going through the motions the rest of the game. Again, Schwerin was often brilliant at third and Taylor was reliable at short, while Chris Pratt made his first infield start and second base and showed savvy there.



With a shore arm, Pergola played first base, while the similarly sore-armed Hurley trotted out to left field. Cohasset's staff has been put through the wringer, biding time until Taylor and/or Pergola can return and begin to eat up innings.

The bats talked again Tuesday, as Ketchum and Pergola both had big days at the plate. Pistol Pete Minnar, this Thursday's starting pitcher against Hanover, singled two runners with a base hit, and designated hitter Mike Rossi was once again in the midst of a Skipper rally.

Inconsistency has been a problem over the first six games, but Cohasset has begun to show glimpses of its potential. With Hurley batting .500 and Taylor already having collected seven extra base hits, run production is becoming less of a problem. It's time for the Skippers to start fine tuning.

"I think our team showed a lot of character today," Coach Knurek said in reference to the Rockland game. "Rockland came back at us, but we hung on. In crunch time, we made the plays. Our bats have finally come alive over the last few games."

While the pitching staff may be dragging, Cohasset has April vacation approaching, with only two games that week. If the team can pick up a pair of wins over the break and use the rest of the week to nurse itself back to health, the home stretch could be a fun one.

Intrepid Mariner correspondent Jim O'Sullivan lets loose with a vicious rip of a swing that was bound to have produced some sort of hit. With recent wins over both Rockland and Abington the CHS baseball squad has evened its mark at 3-3 going into the April vacation week.

Kennedy, who's now 38-years-old a physical therapist with four offices in the Boston area. "I've been in love with the Boston Marathon ever since."

Kennedy, who describes himself as a "voracious runner" since back in high school at North Quincy, has run the Marine Corp Marathon and the Las Vegas Marathon among other events but nothing can compare to Boston in his heart.

"I try to run two each year, but no matter what happens one of the races will always be Boston," said Kennedy. "There's something special about it."

Kennedy, who runs somewhere in the neighborhood of a three hour marathon, said he should be running about 50-60 miles each week building up to the race but the demands of his business and making time for the family make 20-30 miles of roadwork more of a realistic figure.

"There are some nights I get out of the office about 11 p.m., but I've been dreaming of getting out for a run for at least the last three hours," explained Kennedy. "It's how I relieve my stress."

Each year that he runs Boston, Kennedy brings along family and friends to cheer him on.

"This is the one complaint that I have," said Kennedy with a laugh. "After Heartbreak Hill (about 21 miles into the race) I must see at least 50 people that I know each year.

"I don't want to see people that far into the race, when I'm usually drooling, sweaty, staggering and having a hard enough time just trying to catch my breath," he explained. "I want everyone to get a seat early in the course, when I look like a stallion."

MARATHON RUNNER RICHARD KENENDY

"I don't want to see people that far into the race, when I'm usually drooling, sweaty, staggering and having a hard enough time just trying to catch my breath," he explained. "I want everyone to get a seat early in the course, when I look like a stallion."

A number of other runners from Cohasset will be joining Kennedy at the marathon. The list includes John Cavanaro, William Cavanaro, Mark Chase, Don DeMichelle, Chris Haggerty, John Kornet, Francis Wallingford and Gregory Wallingford.

Marshfield's Mary Kate Shea, 36, is running in her third Boston Marathon. Her best time is 3:38. She is a member of the Marshfield Road Runners Club and will be running on Monday with several of the club members.

"The Boston Marathon is a unique event because of the intense crowd," she said. "There's a constant roar and it really inspires you as you move through the course."

However, Shea is more of a running purist and thinks the Boston Marathon has become a little too commercial over the last few years.

"The hype can be a little much," she said. "At heart, it's a race and I think some people have lost that along the way."

Shea has been running 40-60 miles per week in preparation for Monday's race. She has also adjusted her diet in preparation for the big day.

"My goal is to run 3:45 and qualify for next year," she said. "And my training has gone really well. I feel pretty good heading into the race and I'm hoping the weather will be mild. But you never really know until you get out there."

But there are some area runners who are Boston Marathon rookies.

Mark and Donna Richardson of Norwell are running in their first-ever marathon. The married couple has high hopes for the big race.

"We just want to finish," laughed Donna, who is 48. Her husband is 40. "That is our big goal."

Donna has been running for over 20 years but has never entered a marathon. Her husband is also a long-time runner but this year they decided to run the Boston Marathon together.

"I tried to get into the race two years ago by entering the lottery but this is the first year for us," she said. "We both have been training really hard and there's extra incentive for me because my husband is younger than me."

Donna said their two children, Allie, 7, and Tyler, 5, will be among those cheering for them on Monday.

"We have a bunch of people going to the race and we're hoping we don't let them down," she said. "We've been running 30-40 miles per week for the last few months and have done some long runs of 18 and 20 miles recently, so I feel ready."

Pace will be the key, according to Richardson.

"No matter what happens, we're both going to enjoy the day and not go out too fast," she said. "It's going to be a long race and we want to pace ourselves."

FISH STORY

BY MARK TRASK

Trout have local fishermen on the run

With an excited group of junior high kids in tow, Steve Hurley led the way into the backyard of the school where the big green truck idled. Excited shouts and questions filled the cool spring air as Hurley swung up onto the back of the truck, wielding a silver and white net. Moments later a net-full of wriggling trout was hoisted into view and there was bedlam. A short time later only the occasional whiz of a car disturbed the serenity of a well-known pond as hundreds of trout were methodically lowered to the surface of the pond and freed. The first stocking was under way. A few short weeks and one heat wave later all the area stockings have been completed and anglers dot the banks of every pond and stream.

First word trickled in with a half dozen kids picking up crawlers and Power Bait and spinners and spoons. Harry said well I guess it's time to give it a try as he pinned on his new license and he was off with a smorgasbord of bait and lures. The time sailed by as I kept busy, preparing the thousands of items with which we stock the shop. A new rod rack was installed, more cases, rearranging reels to create more room for more gear. The afternoon sun was low when Harry returned, and his smile gave him away before he even shut off the engine. We met at the back of the pickup and leaned over to look into the five-gallon bucket strapped to the inside. Wow I breathed, you get one of these every year!

Sure enough, Harry's fish tipped the scale close to 2-1/4 pounds and we both smiled as his picture went up on the wall. Barry went out talking to himself and his mealworms when he saw it. What did he catch it on he hollered. In a second he was back in the store plucking a copper Thomas "Canduit" spoon from the wall and he was off. Next day Barry stopped in early and growled when asked about his luck. Went over to Norris he explained. I could see them rising all over the place. Think I could catch one of those @*&#$@!!. Later that afternoon he had his limit in a bucket and was excitedly planning the next trip.

All over Massachusetts the familiar green tank trucks are following time-honored traditions of stocking. First in February larger ponds and lakes around the state receive hefty loads of trout and brooder salmon. In a warm winter like this past one, many ponds remained open and ice fishing was but a dream. Now into April additional stockings of the ponds and brooks and streams takes place. Most years brooks and streams are running to overflowing with spring snow melt and sometime stocking is delayed until rampaging brooks return to their docile banks. This year the brooks were quite well-behaved and as a result all stocking has been completed. According to Cami, who ably holds down the fort at the Fisheries and Wildlife's Bourne office, all ponds have received at least three stockings and local brooks have been stocked once and crews will continue to stock trout through the first of May.

Locally stocking takes place in Hingham, Weymouth, Norwell, Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield. Weir River and Plymouth River receive fish in Hingham, Whitman's Pond in Weymouth, Second and Third Herring Brooks in Norwell, Bound Brook in Cohasset and Scituate and Tack Factory Pond also in Scituate. Marshfield receives stocking in the tributaries of the South River above the Veteran's Park.

What to use is a common question for the new angler coming through the door. Live baits are natural food for trout and many take nightcrawlers or smaller garden worms or meal worms. Others prefer to use small shiners which also seem to attract early pickerel and perch that are in shallow stringing their eggs in the weeds near shore. Salmon eggs are a traditional trout bait and many are using the popular and successful Power Baits in a variety of colors. Other spincasters like to use minuscule swimmers like Rapalas and Rebels, spinners such as Roostertails, Mepps and Panther Martins and spoons. Gene regularly loads a half dozen LilTiger spoons into his tackle box and does well with them. Others like larger copper spoons, Al's Goldfish, Thomas', Kastmasters, Cleo's, SuperDuper's from Luhr Jensen and more.

Flyfishermen have been seeking Dark Cahill, and Hendrickson patterns for early hatches. Nymphs and dry flies are producing good action.

For anglers eager to tangle with stripers, Dick Turner reports that smaller fish are in the Mt. Hope Bay of Fall River and as far east as Wareham. He suspects the first will be caught this week on favorable tides at the Canal Herring Run. Early surveys seem to indicate a better than average year for the herring. There goes Mike, supersonic down Route 3! Other sightings of small bass have occurred as far north as the commuter boat landing in Hingham.

Get those boats ready! It looks like this will be an earlier than usual season. Check over your gear and get necessary parts and repairs done soon. Don't forget to spool up with fresh line before you tangle with the big one.

Town may get into the sewer supply business

amount to about a 50 percent grant on that part of the project.

Sewer commissioers hope to have an answer within two weeks if the state will allow the highly favorable financing it previously promised for the complete connections on just the equipment instead.

"The state did not reject this approach out of hand," Vanderweil said.

Individual homeowners' betterments would vary with the length of pipe, tank and pump needed depending on the circumstances at each site.

It is not clear where the town would store the equipment and what type of inventory control would be required. The components would have to be shielded from the weather.

Selectmen are grappling with how to sewer north Cohasset without the extra $2.7 million needed. The town appropriated $6.6 million last year for the project and subsequently passed a Prop. 2-1/2 override to spread half or $3.3 million of the cost among all taxpayers. But in December bids came in about 40 percent higher than expected. Phases 1, 2, 3, & 4 were bid separately in the hope of attracting smaller contractors and therefore more bidders. Last month, town meeting rejected appropriating the additional funds even though the town could recoup all of the money through betterments paid by the homeowners.

Selectmen and sewer commissioners have not ruled out going back to town meeting to ask for the money. If purchasing the equipment and letting private contractors install it is not feasible then selectmen said they will consider putting phases 2, 3, and 4 out to bid again but this time as a single contract. Fall town meeting would be asked to appropriate any additional funds to be paid in full by betterments charged to the users.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who lives in phase 2 and has been an advocate of both the central and north Cohasset projects, said buying the equipment is not the way to go.

"It may be a viable alternative but it comes with a whole different set of problems for the homeowner," she said pointing to high on-site costs for construction.

But Bob Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Road, said while town meeting supported the project it did not give the town a "blank check."

"Look at ways of accomplishing the task for fewer dollars," he said.

Sturdy said if homeowners hire their own contractors they can negotiate to get the lowest price.

But Selectman Nan Roth worried some homeowners are not in the financial position to pay for the installation up front. If the town contracts for the project, homeowners can repay the town through betterments assessed over 20 years.

Whatever happens, once the sewer main which will take about 500 days to install is in the ground, homeowners must hook up within about two years. The main is being subsidized with state money and the state is not in a position to build "dry mains," sewer commissioners said.

The town is under a court order to solve its sewer woes. The north Cohasset project which hooks up that part of town via a sewer main to the Hull treatment plant is part of an agreement with the state approved at town meeting about two years ago.

Rift between boards widens over Newtonville

nothing more than cesspools draining right to wetlands and percolating up into the homeowners' yards.

Ulmer said the sewer commission has been aware of the problem for a long time, but has taken no action.

"We thought we had an agreement with the sewer commission to do these homes judiciously," Ulmer said. "But with these homes connecting to the Central Cohasset project, it will be fall before the project even goes to bid. Out of frustration, the board of health has issued an order to the sewer commission to hook up these homes or we will sue them."

The health board also ordered the four home to place their wastewater systems on "tight tanks," sealed tanks that serve as temporary wastewater systems. But tight tanks are imperfect and temporary Ulmer said. He pointed to the time the community center's tight tank overflowed, sending a stream of human feces spilling out into the streets of the Village.

Dan Coughlin of Tutela Engineering was surprised by the health board's latest decision.

"Newtonville was never part of the Central Cohasset equation until town meeting," Coughlin said. "There have to be plans and specifications which have to be approved by the state, the conservation commission, the board of health, and the town manager. It just can't be done overnight, but the health board has always been somewhat ignorant of construction factors."

But Ulmer said the health emergency was an overriding factor.

"We decided that the health risk was enough and want the sewer commission to hook them in at the end of the system now," Ulmer said.

Ulmer pointed out that the problem with the four homes has been around for a long time, but the sewer commission has refused to take action. He said the sewer commission required homeowners to submit to extensive testing, leaving people afraid that they would be forced to comply with Title V if they allowed inspections. Finally, Coughlin inspected the homes. He agreed that there is a health problem with those homes. But he pointed out that the health board was dealing with the problem in the short-term by requiring tight tanks, and the sewer commission planned to do the long-term sewering.

But Ulmer said it has been a long and frustrating process that continues to drag on with no sign of resolution.

"Ted refused to even look at the homes at first and fought against requests to let Dan Coughlin go out and take a look," Ulmer said. "Ted pooh-poohed it and said there was no health emergency at all. Ted only agreed to let these homes into the system after selectman Michael Sullivan browbeat him into doing it at a selectmen's meeting."

Ulmer said there are two locations where the sewer commission could connect the two homes: at the end of Elm Court or at the end of Stockbridge Street.

"These homes aren't miles from the nearest pipe," Ulmer said. "They're right near the terminus of the system."

Coughlin said the sewer commission actually would be using the Elm Court terminus for the four Newtonville homes. But that wouldn't change the realities of a time table restricted by the need for public bids and proper designs and approvals.

Ulmer said the health board feels it has no choice but to threaten the sewer commission with a lawsuit.

"We would go through with the suit only if they delay the hookups again," Ulmer said. "Town meeting approved these homes and it is up to the sewer commission as to when they will do it, but they are taking their sweet time about it."

Cohasset Harbor Marina growth plans sunk

Paul Trendowicz of Beach Street who owns the marina off Parker Avenue wanted to add about 50 more slips to his boat docks.

The harbor committee was not only concerned with the $1.34 million federally-funded dredging project slated to begin in September but with the loss of town moorings and safety issues surrounding the increased traffic from more boats in Bailey's Creek. The creek runs between Goverment Island, the Hagerty and Trendowicz properties and Bassings Beach.

Parker Avenue neighbors wrote to selectmen this week objecting to the impact increased traffic and parking from the proposed expansion would have on their narrow street.

While selectmen asked Trendowicz to come back with his request after the harbor is dredged — his lawyer warned that the marina cannot wait.

Donald Connors, representing the marina, stopped short of threatening court action but said "you leave Cohasset Harbor Marina with no options, we must act. We have got to operate a business.

"We cannot just sit by and wait for sometime in the future, we have to do something."

Trendowicz said it would be a hardship for him to exist behind the federal anchorage line because he would lose half his boats due to lack of room. It had not been a problem before because dredging was not an issue. He faces fines of about $25,000 a day if his boats and slips drift into the federal anchorage area.

The matter is being raised now because about a month ago, Trendowicz learned his request to dredge the inter-tidal zone on the shore side of the marina was turned down by the state for environmental reasons. Those plans had been approved by the Cohasset Conservation Commission. Now he has no choice but to expand into the creek.

Trendowicz, who bought the 2.6 acre former Figueiredo property about four years ago, claims he owns the creek bottom and can get the federal anchorage area removed which would throw a wrench into the town's dredging plans. The dredging project is being done on the premise the town owns the property, his engineer said. Federal money cannot be used for private dredging projects.

But former selectman Peter Pratt, who has continued to help shepherd the dredging project through a myriad of permitting agencies, said a federal easement over navigable waters would supersede all other rights.

'Doctor of dynamic' ends decade in community TV

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

After 10-1/2 years working in Scituate and Cohasset community television, Bob Belliveau has decided to hang up his TV camera and microphone for a new opportunity.

Belliveau, the program director for Scituate Community Television and former program director for Cohasset, steps down from his post at Media One on April 23.

"It hasn't been dull," Belliveau said of his more than 10 years working in community television. "I wanted to make community television feel like a good neighbor and I think I've done that. Now it's time for me to move ahead."

A longtime Weymouth resident, Belliveau has taken a position as Executive Vice President of Marketing and Communications with Quality Management Systems Inc. in Mansfield. The CEO of the international management consulting firm — one of his classmates from his master's program in management at Cambridge College — convinced Belliveau to join the company, he said.

Both communities will feel his absence — at Cohasset's town elections and town meetings, at Scituate's Selectmen meetings and special events, in the studio and around town.

Former talk show personality Wigmore Pierson hosted 'Pierson to Person' for 10 years on cable with Belliveau's help.

"Without Bob's technical expertise, knowledge and enthusiasm, 'Pierson to Person' would not have lasted five months," Pierson said. "He was the guy I relied on behind the scenes. He's a ubiquitous person — everywhere at the same time. We had a terrific run together."

Pierson, whose show went off the air last year, said Belliveau's departure marks "the passing of an era" for community television.

"I believe it is a tremendous loss for both Cohasset and Scituate in terms of what community television could be," he said. "(Media One) will never recapture the same enthusiasm for local programming as it had under Bob's leadership."

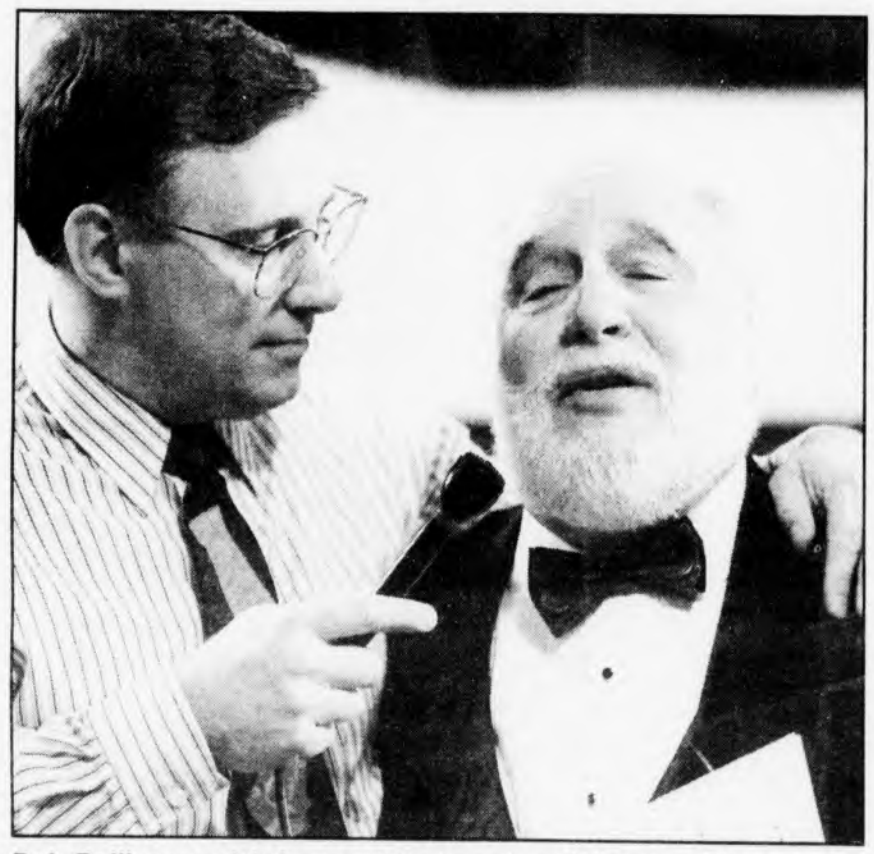
Belliveau heralds the "Pierson to Person" show as the "Cadillac" of the many endeavors he undertook at Media One. Belliveau and Pierson took the show inside the Plymouth County House of Correction and the John F. Kennedy Museum and were able to attract guests like then-Gov. William Weld and then-Senate President William Bulger.

"We did it with class. We did it with style. It was always fair and it was always objective," Belliveau said of the 10 years of broadcasts the pair produced. "I'm very proud of the work we did together. We were a team that worked."

Pierson described Belliveau as a "proverbial white tornado" while working in Scituate and Cohasset community TV.

"He was moving and communicating at break-neck speed. He was always doing five things at once and he was able to get all of them done," Pierson said.

During his career, Belliveau has made a point of being visible and accessible in town.



"Whenever someone comes in, I put down what I'm doing and say 'Hi, I'm Bob Belliveau, the doctor of dynamic,'" Belliveau said.

Among the highlights of his decade-long career at Media One Belliveau counts many accomplishments, including the live broadcast of Cohasset's town meeting two years ago from the South Shore Music Circus tent, wiring Scituate town hall for broadcast and outfitting a 13-foot-long truck as a mobile production van equipped with instant replay. He has also shepherded more than 200 volunteers through an education in comm[illegible] television at the North Scitu[illegible] dio.

Producing quality programming for 4,000 Cohasset homes and 6,800 Scituate homes has always been a serious responsibility to Belliveau. He said he could not have done it without the help of the many volunteers who give of their time each week — especially Peter Whitfield and George Bearce, whom Belliveau called his right hand men.

Shows like "Pierson to Person" and "Townie Talk" — a show focused on telling the unofficial history of Scituate through some of the community's better known "townies" — have made Belliveau's job enjoyable for him, he said.

"It means a lot to me that we're producing television that means something," he said.

CHL sues town to overturn order

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill filed a lawsuit against the town in land court on April 14 to overturn an order by Building Inspector Robert Egan to permanently shut down the facility.

The action comes less than one week after the zoning board of appeals upheld Egan's decision to shut down CHL because of a permit violation. The ZBA also upheld an order by Egan ordering CHL to remove 7,800 square feet that had been dumped in a section of the landfill not approved for dumping. CHL is also suing to overturn the order to remove the illegal waste.

The zoning board is also named as a defendant in the lawsuit.

CHL was still open when The Mariner went to press on Wednesday.

The eight-page lawsuit asks the court to overturn Egan's decisions and to declare that the ZBA exceeded its authority by upholding those conditions and by ordering CHL to remove the overfill or face fines. In the lawsuit, CHL-attorney Anton Moehrke writes that the town cannot uphold the special permit because Cohasset once used the permit as the basis for a lawsuit against CHL.

"Because the town previously brought a successful suit to have

Train's fate questioned by local legislators

But MBTA officials deny rumors train is dead

By Adrianne Appel
STATEHOUSE REPORTER

Two area legislators claim the Greenbush commuter rail line project isn't just stalled — but drawing its final breaths.

"My feeling is, after talking with top transportation officials, that we probably will not see that train," said Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, a vocal opponent to the restoration of the Greenbush line.

Spokesmen for the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA), however, called the claim a rumor and said the MBTA only needs to win environmental permission before moving full-speed ahead on the line that would connect Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate to Boston.

"The Secretary of Transportation has made a clear commitment to Greenbush," said Joe Pesaturo, spokesman for the MBTA. Standing in the way of the project is environmental permission from Trudy Coxe, secretary of environmental affairs and the Army Corps of Engineers which must grant a permit because construction will involve filling in more than five acres of wetlands under federal jurisdiction.

The fact that the MBTA is planning another commuter line, between Boston and New Bedford, does not take any resources or commitment away from the Greenbush project, Pesaturo said. The latest plan is to not run the New Bedford train along the Old Colony Rail line, he said.

> "My feeling is, after talking with top transportation officials, that we probably will not see that train."

Another MBTA official who asked not to be named said he received seven phone calls Tuesday about the viability of Greenbush. He questioned who was starting rumors that the Greenbush project is dead.

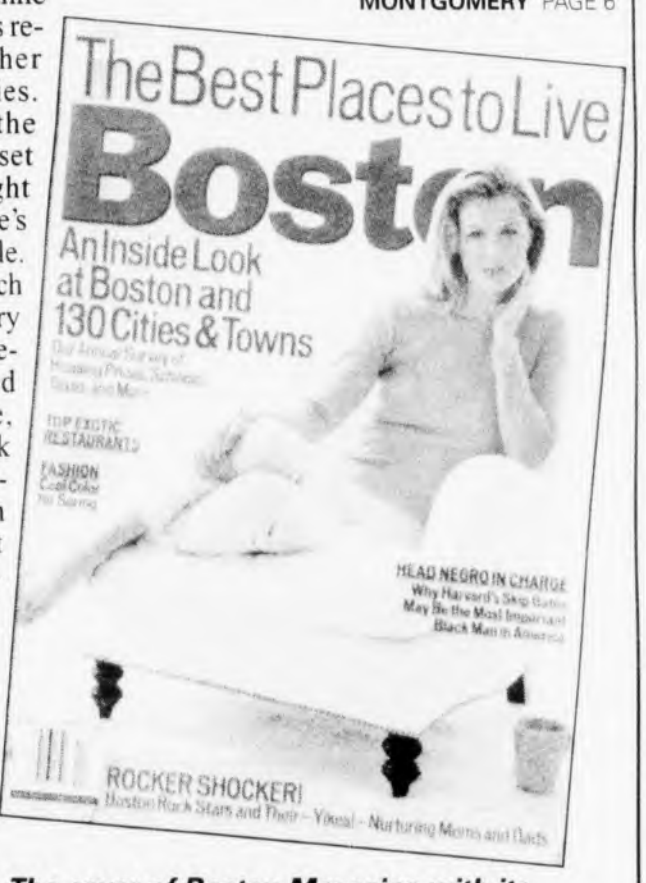
Resident at magazine helm

Montgomery: at home on hot seat

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Imagine taking over as publisher of Boston Magazine in January, only to find the magazine at the center of a media hornet's nest. Timothy Montgomery, who grew up in Weymouth, found himself in just that spot starting last week. Yet the new publisher did not look singed from the proverbial initiation by fire.

"Welcome to Boston Magazine — the home of controversy," he said.



Timothy John Montgomery graduated in 1965 from Weymouth High, where he was vice president of his class. Now a Cohasset resident, he became the man at the center of the action last week after the NBC "Today Show" covered heated reaction to an attention-grabbing headline in Boston's April issue.

That headline, which the new publisher deems "regrettable," announced a story about Harvard professor Henry Louis Gates. Late last week, the furor was still building. Gates, the head of the Afro-American studies department, belatedly came out against the headline in an interview with the Harvard Crimson. Then Bell Atlantic executives issued a statement they were closely watching the magazine's response to the criticism and might withdraw their advertisements.

Montgomery spoke frankly about the verbal fireworks that followed the headline and the magazine's recent run of other provocative stories. He defended the Gates story and set the record straight about the magazine's position on the title. The headline, which echoes a derogatory phrase used to describe a privileged plantation slave, definitely took some people's attention away from a solid story about a significant person, he said.

"I regret that," he said. But the decision to go with the once-derogatory term was not meant to be racist. The same phrase is now "widely used by black intellectuals" and writers to slam the white establishment's practice of "picking one black as a spokesman for the race," in the words of editor Craig Unger. Montgomery also noted the contemporary meaning of the head-

Spring cleaning at water department

As the spring 1998 construction period has begun, C.W.S. wants to inform the residents of Cohasset as to the schedule of projects this year:

- Cleaning and lining on Pleasant Street April 10 - May 4.
- Cleaning and lining on Atlantic Avenue May 4-26.
- Cleaning and lining on Jerusalem Road May 26 - July 15.

C.W.S. would like to remind residents of Cohasset that temporary discoloration in the construction areas can happen off and on during the cleaning and lining process. The discoloration is only temporary and the water is safe to drink.

Streets to be resurfaced

The following streets are scheduled to be resurfaced (weather permitting), according to DPW Supt. Harold W. Litchfield. Residents should expect some delays when traveling these roads: Hammond Avenue, Joy Place, Elm Court, Border Street Pier and Hugh Strain Road.

Brush deadline extended

Residential brush acceptance at the R.T.F. has been extended until April 26. No trees over 12" in diameter. No contractors allowed.

A SPORTING CHANCE

Chiropractors may be best known for their manual manipulations of the spine and joints to help remedy back and neck injuries, but they may also be called into play to treat sports-related injuries. The first step injured athletes and exercisers can take to help themselves is to seek help at the first sign of pain or extended soreness of muscles or joints. Those who try to "work through" their injuries will only find they make their injuries worse, as well as complicate treatment. Those who have sufficient body awareness to schedule an appointment with the chiropractor will be rewarded with a complete examination to pinpoint the cause of the injury, followed by immediate treatment that may involve different modalities.

Injured muscles and joints need professional care. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, your good health is our main concern. Stop the pain – call 545-7388 today to schedule an appointment. WINDOWS INTO COHASSET

From shipping family home to gourmet pizza house

Village Colonial has a rich history

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

It served as the delicatessen in the movie "The Witches of Eastwick." But the Samuel Bates House at 35-39 South Main St. has a local legend brighter than its film credits. Built in 1811, the house epitomizes the changing character of the village. Now a "mixed use" building with offices in the basement, storefronts on the street level and an apartment upstairs, the building originally provided a handsome home for a member of a leading Cohasset family. Samuel Bates III was a grandson of the Bates shipping magnate. Bates became a selectman, town clerk and treasurer. His brother Newcomb Bates, a Colonel in the militia, built the house next door where Cards and Shards is located. Their father Samuel Bates, Jr. built another Heritage Trail house at 63 Highland Ave. Samuel, Jr. drowned near Brush Island in 1803 after a shipwreck. The family was out of the maritime business shortly after, though Bates relatives took over the shipping line later. The Bates built the Ship's Chandlery now standing on Elm Street almost directly across from the house. (The chandlery was sawed in half in the 1950's and moved from its original location on the wharf. For a while, the ghost of Samuel's relative John Bates was said to haunt the upstairs office, though his spirit is said to have since left.)

The Samuel Bates House on South Main Street in the village will soon house a gourmet pizzeria on one side. The other side is still for rent.

Tuesday, the view from the south side of the house puts a frame around the village Maritime Museum. With the tree in the front yard beginning to blossom and spread shade over the grass, the Bates House looked comfortably anchored in Cohasset regardless of the changes it has survived.

> "If you look at the stores downtown, they were primarily built as homes."
> — NOEL RIPLEY, HISTORICAL COMMISSION

The first floor has been used for businesses for at least 17 years, according to Karen Kirkendall of Coastal Countryside Properties. Kirkendall remembered a bookstore, a bakery, a fabric shop and a gift shop in the space at various times. The commercial space inside the building is now vacant, but a gourmet pizzeria is expected to open soon in the space Zinnia's Cafe left. The other store front is still for rent. The property is owned by the London Company.

In its glory days, the house was originally a home, according to Noel Ripley, the chairman of the Historical Commission. Originally, only "Mom and Pop" establishments operated in the village because most of the commerce in the town's early days was carried out at the harbor.

"If you look at the stores downtown, they were primarily built as homes," Ripley said. "They had everything from a Chinese laundry to a bowling alley, and it was all down at the harbor." Though the Cohasset Savings Bank occupied the house around 1853 when the bank first started, the house became a private home again later. According to David Wadsworth of the Historical Society, the Bates House was "probably one of the last houses in the village used entirely as a residence."

Or almost entirely. During the 1950's Edith Grassie and her two children, Isabelle and Albert, lived there. But Grassie, the owner of Cohasset Taxi, also ran a livery business out of her living room. Wadsworth drove a cab for her. He said Grassie used to come along for the ride, sitting in the front seat. Most of the time, they picked up people at the train or took other "regulars" shopping.

"She knew most everybody," he said. "Most of the customers were regulars." When they were not out on calls, Grassie and Wadsworth used to sit in her living room. She watched soap operas in the afternoon while she waited for the customers to telephone. Grassie kept two "big Dodge sedans" in the taxi parking spaces. It was located almost exactly where the crosswalk is marked now.

Wadsworth said the store fronts were added after she left the Bates House, although businesses did operate on the first floor earlier, probably by the late 1800's. He doubted the house was originally built with a store on the first level. Edward Everett Ellms also lived in the house. He was a farmer. The first Heritage Trail Houses book named the house after him, though he was not the original owner.

Though the Historical Society has no record of the architect, Wadsworth believes the original building probably was built following a "plan book." He said the Colonials in Cohasset look so similar the builders probably followed commercially-produced designs.

"Most of the houses were fairly plain. They weren't high style. The decorative work was probably added later.

"It's a nice late Colonial house of the federal era," he said.

The staircase is one of the features that make the Colonial Bates house reminiscent of the residence it once was.

Greenbush train's fate questioned by local legislators

"Nothing has changed," and the project is moving forward, he said.

Murray said the MBTA is looking for a way to dump the project because it has dragged on for more than a dozen years. Now it is competing for capital funds with the Big Dig.

"It's dragged on too long," she said.

People close to the Weld-Cellucci administration have told her that the project is dead, Murray said.

"That's what I'm hearing. Nothing official," she said.

"It's been kept on life support. It's been kept alive out of political reasons," said Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth.

A major reason former Gov. William Weld backed the plan was to give a "nod to the South Shore Chamber [of Commerce]," said Hedlund, a strong opponent of the rail line.

Hedlund said that, at a recent meeting in Hingham, Cellucci asked him for advice about "what to do about the train."

Hedlund told Cellucci he could do what is politically correct or he could do the right thing and kill the project.

"It was a weird exchange," Hedlund said.

The project also has been hit with vocal opposition from many of the communities the train would serve. Environmental questions have been raised about the impact of diesel rail on the coastal area through which the train would run.

But Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, said Murray's information "doesn't make any sense.

"It's the regurgitation of old news that no one should be excited about," Hynes said. He has heard nothing but unwavering commitment from MBTA officials about the project.

Hynes agreed with MBTA officials that the New Bedford line will not compete with Greenbush.

"I would say that the New Bedford project is more fragile than Greenbush," he said. It is not as far along as Greenbush and is not as much of a priority."

Further, he said the House Committee on Transportation recently included language in the upcoming transportation bond bill that would protect Greenbush from encroachment by the New Bedford line.

The original plan for the New Bedford line was for it to connect up to the Middleboro line which along with the Old Colony Kingston line goes onto one track in Braintree. The track is already too congested with trains running along the Old Colony line, Hynes said. Greenbush trains will also share those tracks when its trains start running.

The language in the transportation bond bill, which is months away from being approved by the full legislature, recommends that the New Bedford line run through Stoughton, not Middleboro. This would completely avoid the Old Colony line. The New Bedford trains would originate in Back Bay Station, not South Station like the Old Colony lines.

Hynes is optimistic that, despite some vocal opposition, the project will prevail, he said.

If the project wins approval, it will move into the design phase by spring 1999, Pesaturo said. Construction would begin in the summer and be completed by the summer 2001, he said.

But, "we're not going to start rail service unless all those questions have been answered," Pesaturo said. "We're a 100 percent committed to moving forward once we have all those permits."

The project's current cost estimate is $285 million, up from $215 million. The costs have increased due to the project's delay and mitigation activity in most of the towns the train will run through.

"Each community is interested in mitigation for noise and vibration," Pesaturo said.

"We'd like to avoid litigation," he said.

The legislature has authorized about $50 million so far toward the project. The MBTA will have to return to the legislature for more funds after the project receives environmental permission to go forward, Pesaturo said.

A spokesman in the office of Sen. Mark Montigny, D-New Bedford, said the legislature authorized $136 million toward the New Bedford line in the 1996 transportation bond bill.

New Bedford badly needs and wants a rail line, he said.

"If Greenbush doesn't want it, we'll take it," he said.

Neighbors protest Sheldon Road boathouse proposal

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The area around Atlantic Avenue and Sheldon Road is something out of an old seaman's dream. It is a sea-loving neighborhood that contains many stately homes and boathouses. But, according to some residents of the neighborhood, a new boathouse proposed by a Sheldon Road resident is far too big for the area and possibly even illegal.

The zoning board heard a request by Stephen Bobo, 11 Sheldon Road, on an appeal of a petition to build a new boathouse on his property. Building Inspector Robert Egan originally rejected the request because Bobo's house is on a non-conforming lot — the required lot size for the area is 60,000 square feet — but Bobo's property is only 40,000 square feet. The zoning board took the matter under advisement at a meeting two weeks ago.

Several abutters opposed the project.

"We're faced with a situation where an individual is trying to build a truly massive structure," said Sam Wakeman of 255 Atlantic Ave. "I truly believe the applicant and his father will build steel boats. I heard the senior Bobo (health board member Stephen Bobo) talk of building steel boats. This is a quiet neighborhood."

Attorney Richard Henderson represented Wakeman before the zoning board. Henderson said the bottom line was that the lot is non-conforming.

"This is a 40,000 square-foot lot in a 60,000 square-foot lot zone," Henderson said. "You're being asked to take what was vacant land and to expand the lot by combining the two pieces."

> "There is no plan at this time, nor will there ever be, to build a steel boat. The only boats we ever sold were our personal boats after many years of use. There has never been any profit motive in any of this. It's a hobby."
> — VIVIAN BOBO

Bobo currently has a plastic greenhouse-like structure that he uses to store, build and repair boats. Bobo wants to replace the greenhouse with a 24-foot-high, 40-foot by 22-foot boathouse. Bobo said the new boathouse would be built with Victorian-style architecture that is more in character with the neighborhood.

Bobo's attorney, Charles Humphreys, said Bobo's property was originally made up of two connected, but legally separate lots. Bobo applied for a building permit last June for a different structure. That permit was approved. Then when Bobo stated his intention to build the boathouse, Egan told him it would be better to combine the two lots into one large lot. Bobo followed Egan's advice. Then when Bobo combined the lots and applied for a new building permit, Egan rejected the project.

"Mr. Egan informed my client that where this was an accessory use, the lots should be adjoined," Humphreys said. "My client disadvantaged himself by following that advice and then the building inspector rejected the request."

Accessory uses, such as boathouses and garages, are allowed on conforming lots as a matter of right. But at 40,000 square feet, Bobo's combined lots fall far short of the 60,000 square foot minimum for a conforming lot. But Humphreys argued that the new boathouse would not be an expansion of a non-conforming use, and should be allowed as a matter of right.

Others disagreed.

Jerome O'Callahan, formerly of Hingham and now at 12 Sheldon Road, said he was told by a Realtor that the greenhouse was a temporary structure that would be removed eventually.

"We were told it was going to be torn down, then expanded, and now it's going to be a structure bigger than my house," O'Callahan said. "There is a commercial operation there that you have to look at."

Several other residents accused Bobo of using the structure as a commercial operation to build and then sell boats.

"I think there's a business going on there," said planning board member Bill Good of 66 Atlantic Ave. "This is a detriment to the safety of the residents and an affront to the neighborhood. They're using power tools at all times of the day. I think the best indication of future performance is past performance, and this should not be allowed."

Bobo's mother, Vivian Bobo, spoke in favor of the proposal. She also denied accusations that her family built boats for profit or intended to build steel boats.

"We've always had a very good relationship with the neighbors and I'm very surprised by all of this," she said. "There is no plan at this time, nor will there ever be, to build a steel boat. The only boats we ever sold were our personal boats after many years of use. There has never been any profit motive in any of this. It's a hobby."

Humphreys added that the proposed boathouse wasn't that large and was dwarfed by a nearby barn on a neighbor's property.

"The most important thing this does is move all outdoor activities inside," Humphreys said. "By confining these activities in the boathouse, we will be making an improvement."

Montgomery: at home on hot seat

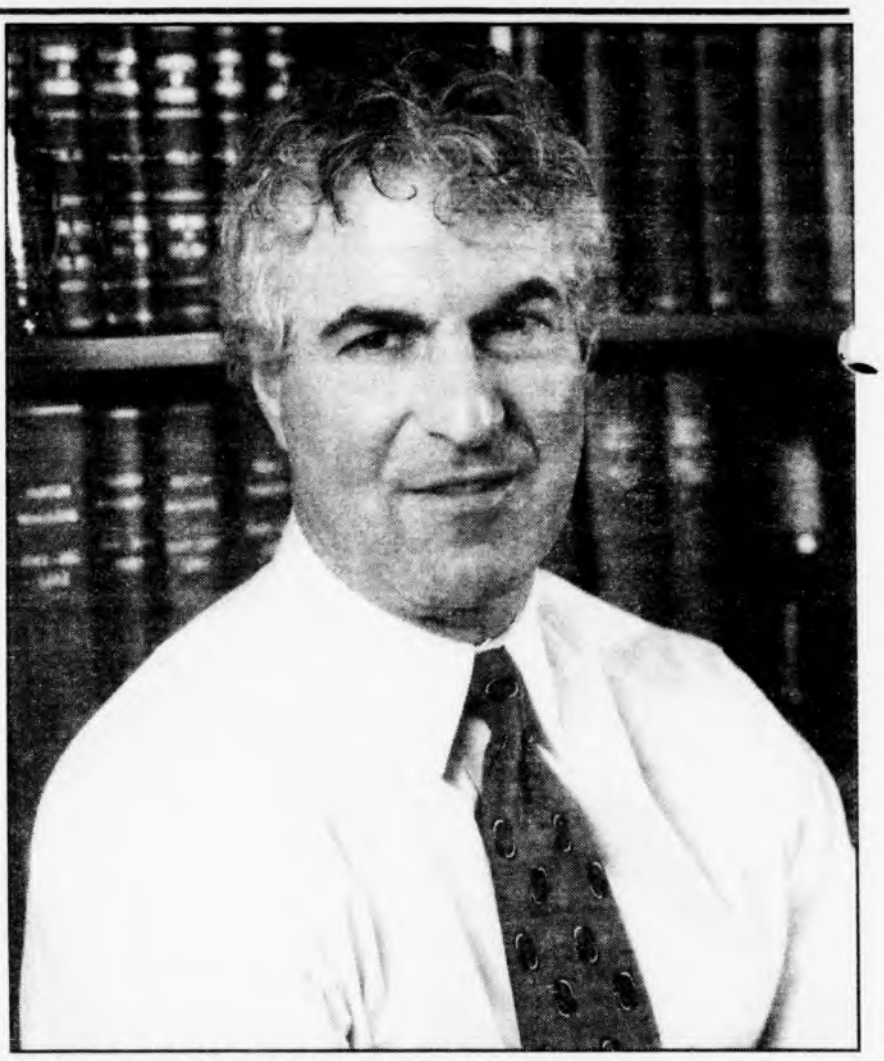
line was explained in the story, and the professor was consulted about the title in advance.

"Gates knew about the headline and had no problem with it," he said, though the professor apparently later changed his mind. The publisher also contradicted reports the management has not issued an apology but only expressed "regret." The editor already has said he was sorry the headline caused "any pain," according to Montgomery.



"The fact of the matter is, we have apologized," he said. "It may seem like dancing on the head of a pin making a distinction between regret and apology. But a first-class important piece of journalism is being lost in the debate over a headline. Boston Magazine has stepped out in an important way in discussing issues of race which are important to this community."

Montgomery agreed Boston Magazine has continued to go after controversial subjects, while other magazines have turned exclusively to the tourism market. Though the magazine covers the city restaurant and entertainment beats, a sample of recent stories has also provided food for thought for pundits and Pulitzer Prize winners. Since January when he took over as the publisher, Boston Magazine has been everywhere.

"There has been a fair amount of publicity around the magazine since I've been here. We have had a couple of controversial stories," he said, citing an article about the "new" Irish and another attention-grabbing headline "Dead Kennedys." That story followed the Dec. 31, 1997 accidental death of Michael Kennedy, a former Cohasset resident and the son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Montgomery defended the Boston Magazine brand of journalism and said the headlines were not chosen to be "cynical" but because they fit the story.

This is Montgomery's first experience with print media. For the past 12 years, he worked in radio, primarily as an owner of a group of stations sold last year before he became director of broadcast operations for the Phoenix Media Communications Group in Boston. He got the opportunity at Boston Magazine after the owners decided they wanted someone with a broadcasting background.

Cohasset resident Tim Montgomery

"I was skeptical at first," he said. But he liked the emphasis on energy and promotions. Running a magazine is much like running a radio station, he said. It's a collaboration, he said.

Montgomery got his start in broadcasting in college when he landed a summer job as an NBC page at the Rockerfeller Center studios in New York City. He worked for the "Tonight Show with Johnny Carson" for two summers on a variety of assignments and made up his mind then he wanted to do something in radio or TV.

As for Carson, Montgomery found him "a bit aloof." The star "nodded" to him when Montgomery brought him his shirts before the show. Otherwise, he particularly remembered guest appearances by then Democratic party presidential candidate Hubert Humphrey and the late actress Sharon Tate. He could not say why Humphrey made an impression. Tate stuck in his mind because she became a victim of the Manson gang soon after her Tonight Show appearance.

Montgomery lived in the East Village while he worked at NBC and sampled the variety of people drawn to New York City in the late 1960s. For instance, the tenant in the apartment one floor below was Louis Abolofia. Though never a star of Carson's luminance, Abolofia may have been the most famous character in the East Village. He ran for president in the 1968 campaign as the nude candidate. His slogan — "I have nothing to hide" — was emblazoned on the side of the East Fourth Street apartment building along with a giant picture of the candidate holding a guitar.

"Here I was in the epicenter of the hippie world, and I had to walk out of that apartment building in a suit to go to work every day at NBC," he laughed. "It was a wild, wacky place."

After graduation from Bowdoin College, Montgomery did a stint as a Vista volunteer. Then he landed a job at new WBCN radio in Boston.

A TRUE GENTLEMAN

It was a sad time in Cohasset last week, with the passing of Bob Hall — he was one of the "Originals" — a true gentleman, a wonderful father and a man devoted to the youth of our town. Mr. Hall represented everything good in a person, and every life he touched was made better for it! Our hearts go out to the Hall family, as do our thoughts and prayers!

UNIQUE SPRING BREAK

Charles Endris, the son of Steve and Ellen Endris of Black Rock Road, is participating in Hamilton College's sixth annual alternative spring break program.. This program provides students with the opportunity to engage in volunteer work during the first week of their spring break, and Charles is at one of six sites (either the Tennessee Trails in Nashville, New Bern, N.C., Centro Campesino Farmworkers Center in Florida City, Richmond, Jacksonville, Florida, or Kentucky). The goal of the program is to increase participants' awareness of social issues while generating an interest in community service work. A senior majoring in geology at Hamilton, Endris is a graduate of Cohasset High School.

DAR honors good citizen award recipients

On Sunday, April 19, the Col. Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution held a tea to honor this year's recipients of the DAR Good Citizen Award. This award is given annually to members of the senior class of accredited high schools. This program is on the National Association of Secondary School Principals list of contests and activities. The students are selected by the faculty and voted on by the members of the senior class. They must have the qualities of dependability, service, leadership and patriotism.

The students honored this year are Alia Afsher, of Cohasset High School, Wendy Ciovacco, of Hingham High School and Stephen Masrell of Rockland High School.

Alia Afshar, daughter of Nader and Connie Afshar of Cohasset, has been active in school as a peer counselor, member of the National Honor Society and Volunteer Action Group. She traveled to Appalachia with the ASP and to Belize. She will be majoring in International Relations at George Washington University next year.

Wendy Ciovacco, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ciovacco of Hingham is a member of the National Honor Society and has played field hockey and softball. She helps at the Hull Food Pantry. She will be attending Harvard University next year and plans to become a doctor.

Stephen Masrell, son of David and Cathy Masrell of Rockland, is a member of the National Honor Society and helped form the Rockland Student Alliance to improve understanding between students. He is also a student trustee at the South Shore Natural Science Center and serves as a counselor at their summer day camp. He will be pursuing a career in Government at Providence College.

Also, receiving the award from Hull High School is Deborah Fleck. Debbie is president of her class, a member of the National Honor Society and on the Student Council. She is a peer tutor. She is also captain of the field hockey and softball teams.

The students were presented with certificates and pins from the DAR. They will also be receiving citations from the State House.

The DAR honored Alia Afshar, who has been active in school as a peer counselor, member of the National Honor Society, Volunteer Action Group and the Appalachia Service Project. Alia is shown here with state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray.

What makes our bagels the best?
We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches
We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

4) Fresh salads with soup, quiche, or meat topping for up to 15 servings.

The Garage

If any of you are discouraged about tomorrow, just stop by the old DPW garage in the town parking lot.

Something is going on there, that is both young and exciting.

A handful of teenagers with vision to see beyond the cinder-block walls and oil stained floors are hard at work building a dream. They see a place to call their own. A place that can be transformed with their own hard work into something really special.

Anyone whoever built a tree house or fort when they were kids knows the exhilarating feeling of pure creation.

To the seasoned eye, the old garage is an eyesore looking for a wrecking ball.

But to a group of Cohasset teens, it's a structure with a future.

'The youth gets together his materials to build a bridge to the moon, or, perchance, a palace or temple on the earth, and, at length, the middle-aged man concludes to build a woodshed with them."

— HENRY DAVID THOREAU

They "robbed the shed," as junior Tony Bramblett said, and brought their tools to the garage where they hammered and nailed for hours over the weekend.

Plans are to construct rest rooms, a snack bar and office area on one side and eventually turn the other side into a hall where dances can be held.

Months ago Tony and classmate Jami Butman brought the idea of transforming the old garage into a teen center to selectmen. Their idea set the stage for the youth resources committee, created by selectmen to take a look at the big picture of coordinating youth activities in town under a single umbrella.

While Tony and Amy and their friends initially didn't want a lot too many adults getting in the way — the YRC, which includes teenagers among its members, has turned out to be a real positive. Jack Worley, who for more than two decades has been at the helm of the town's recreation department, is serving as a most capable advisor.

It's too soon to tell if the garage will indeed attract the numbers and interest to keep it viable. The existing teen center at the Independence Building has struggled and its predecessor at Depot Court couldn't really make a go of it.

But we think with the right combination of youthful enthusiasm and adult guidance, the garage has got a real chance.

The teens could use some help with electrical work and light carpentry. They've raised about $4,000 so far through donations, dances and a benefit dinner.

So if there are any old tree house lovers out there with expertise or money to contribute, please contact Mr. Worley at 383-4109.

'Thanks for the memories'

To the Editor:

Robert Belliveau's departure from Media One at the end of April, Cohasset and Scituate will lose a friend and a most vigorous supporter of citizen involvement in local television programming.

Bob arrived at American Cablesystems in January 1988, as "Pierson to Person" was beginning its early programming in Cohasset. In addition to program director, he assumed responsibilities as executive producer of the "Pierson to Person" show. With Bob's encouragement we went "live" every Thursday night in late 1988.

Bob's dedication, commitment and enthusiasm in Cohasset and Scituate have been contagious.

His departure will leave a void in local TV programming, which will be hard to fill. We, the public in Cohasset and Scituate, will miss the extensive quality coverage of town affairs which Bob and his volunteers made happen.

To Bob Belliveau: a fond farewell and Godspeed, dear friend, as you move on to new and exciting professional challenges. Thanks for the memories.

Feelings overflow for memorial fountain

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Public history and family history veer near a collision course this week over a stone fountain at the corner of Atlantic Avenue and Beach Street.

The fountain, teeming with pansies, has doubled as a memorial to two Cohasset men since the World War II era. Rosamond Blake, a direct descendent of one of them, remembers often riding her bicycle by the fountain. The memorial, overflowing with flowers planted by the Cohasset Garden Club, was part of her childhood map. But Blake, who now resides in Granville, Ohio, never suspected the fountain once provided water for horses and was also a small part of her family history.

Recently, she found out her great-grandmother donated the stone fountain to the town as a trough for horses. She made the gift in memory of her husband, Henry Miles Knowles, because he loved horses. Knowles died in 1903. Blake now wants to pursue an idea to restore the fountain with running water. That would mean removing the flowers and the name plaque honoring Perry Higginson Johnson.

But a relative of the veteran who perished in World War II did not relish the idea of moving the memorial to Johnson. And the chairman of the historical commission, Noel Ripley, said he feared many people would be upset about a change. Ripley said he saw nothing wrong with keeping the memorial to both men.

"It's always been flowers there," Ripley said. His board is expected to settle the matter, although Ripley said Wednesday he had not received a copy of the letter Blake wrote to Town Manager Mark Haddad. The Town Manager said he forwarded the letter to the Historical Commission. The next steps, if there are any, will come from them.

In a telephone interview Monday Blake said she did not want to offend the Garden Club or the Johnson family. But she still sounded excited to discover a bit of buried family history.

The fountain, teeming with pansies, has doubled as a memorial to two Cohasset men since the World War II era.

"It's great," she said. Blake said the water originally flowed through a bronze pineapple in the center of the trough. She has explained the history of the fountain in a letter to Haddad.

"Water sprayed out of small holes on the surface of the pineapple," she wrote in her April 3 letter. The bronze pineapple was sacrificed to the World War II effort and melted down. The water was turned off, and eventually the town mounted a memorial to war veteran Perry Higginson Johnson in the fountain. All the while, Blake's grandmother Leslie Knowles Blake privately wished the water would someday flow through the fountain again. But she never spoke out about it because she did not want to "offend" the Johnson family.

Blake suggested the fountain could work again, provided the plates under the ground did not break during an excavation. She is also willing to test the waters of controversy, though her mother was initially against the idea. Mini Blake Holmes now lives in Weymouth.

"She had more or less accepted the fact it would be tactless to take issue with a memorial to Mr. Johnson," Blake said. But Holmes thought the Johnson memorial might now be moved to another spot, near the fountain at the corner of Beach Street. She doubted people related to Johnson still lived in Cohasset.

But Susan McVeigh of Atlantic Avenue said she is a relative. Moreover, one of Johnson's sisters and a brother are still living. McVeigh said she didn't remember it ever being a fountain and would be sorry to see a change. She said no one would notice the war memorial if it were moved to the Beach Street spot. She preferred to see things stay as they are.

"I've certainly gotten used to it being there," she said. "It always was there. Our garden club really has taken care of it for a number of years. I would hate to think that would stop."

Another Cohasset Garden Club member, Mitzi Railsback of Atlantic Avenue, is one of several who have tended the flowers in the Knowles fountain. She predicted a change would bring "quite a lot of problems." Railsback said having a memorial to two men did not seem confusing. The water trough honored Knowles, and the war memorial was for Johnson. The flowers are for the community, and "an awful lot of people enjoy them." Ironically, she also said it was actually the Knowles family that started planting flowers in the fountain.

"They got old. They needed help, and the Cohasset Garden Club took it over." Railsback said some relatives of Johnson through the Higginson family are among the club members who have tended the flowers in the fountain.

"I never knew any of the Blakes to take care of the fountain," she said. According to Railsback, the water connection must have been taken out years ago and might be expensive to re-install. No water runs there now, although she often has wished for some.

"Since I've been lugging water in buckets from my house and I'm down by the bridge, I often wished there was water there," she said.

There's a move afoot to restore the fountain at Beach Street and Atlantic Avenue so it has running water once again.

Lamberts Lane sparks fly at school board meeting

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

School board member Kathy Ofsthun took some heat April 9 from a group of Lamberts Lane parents. The quarrel started after she voiced opposition to a motion from board member Joseph McElroy. He has championed the effort to get a school bus stop built on the private way. He offered the motion to keep the effort alive. (Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad at their April 6 meeting to look into using the access road of the country club for the school bus to back into to turnaround).

Ofsthun did not immediately support the motion, though she did vote for an amended motion school board Chairman Richard Shea later proposed. Shea's motion to reaffirm the board's "strong commitment to work out a solution by the 1998-1999 school year" passed unanimously. But initially, she said she definitely favored taking a new look at school bus service on Lamberts Lane provided a bus turnaround could be built. But she balked at making any other commitments.

"It's outside of our responsibility to try to get a turnaround built for them," she said. Her comments drew an angry reaction from parent Lawrence Aherne of 188 Lamberts Lane.

"You're not doing the people a service," he said. "You're pushing us back." Aherne said McElroy's motion marked the first time any town board had established a timetable for settling the dilemma of Lamberts Lane.

The Lamberts Lane residents have repeatedly seen their drive to get a school bus stop mired in bureaucracy. While the planning board has followed a determination Lamberts Lane is a public street, other boards have continued to view it as a private way. Under state laws, the town is reportedly allowed to maintain private ways but not undertake new construction on them. Lamberts Lane needs substantial grading improvements to allow a bus to travel it safely. Narrow, undulating, and occasionally rising at steep angles, the driver's vision of oncoming cars is periodically blocked. Moreover, it is a dead end with not enough room to turn the bus around.

Apart from the road conditions, the parents have also faced an obstacle from the school department. Schools superintendent Stephen Hart has been reluctant to provide bus service on Lamberts Lane due to cost. He said adding the service adds another 10 minutes to the bus schedule and could ultimately mean adding another bus.

Newly elected school board member Mark DeGiacomo went on the record to put safety above cost considerations.

"With all due respect, that is not a safe street for children. I know we all feel that way obviously." Ofsthun agreed the conditions for drivers and pedestrians posed a safety hazard.

Consultant: parish center plan would improve drainage

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Plans by St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church to build a 10,500-square-foot parish center have had some abutters worried that such a building would exacerbate serious flooding problems in the area. But a report by a consultant to the zoning board has indicated that the project's drainage plan could actually decrease flooding in the area.

John Modzelewski of Civil Designs Inc., presented his report to the zoning board at its April 15 meeting. Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said board members are preparing a decision and will vote on the matter at a May 1 meeting scheduled for 7 a.m.

"The report answered neighbors' questions on not only the effects the building would have on the area, but also on overall drainage patterns," DeGiacomo said.

Church officials say the parish center is needed to accommodate increased membership at St. Anthony's. The plan would add eight classrooms, an office, additional storage space and an outside gazebo to the back of the church. However, the parish center would increase the lot coverage from 34 percent to 40 percent. The church is in a residential zone, which has a maximum allowable lot coverage of 30 percent. Zoning board members agreed that the church is a unique use in that zone.

DeGiacomo said that although the board has not yet voted on the center, he expects it will be approved as long as engineers for the project follow guidelines recommended by Modzelewski.

"John Modzelewski recommended changes to the plan to eliminate any drainage problems that could occur because of the building," DeGiacomo said. "The church's plan was not horribly flawed to begin with, and John's changes were not major."

DeGiacomo said Modzelewski's main recommendations were minor modifications to the parish's drainage plans. Modzelewski recommended that the parish add a drainage system to direct water off or around the foundation.

"We asked the applicant if they had any problems with John's recommendations, but they said they didn't," DeGiacomo said.

Modzelewski's report stated that the church's drainage plan would increase water runoff from rainstorms, but the excess water would be directed away from abutters' homes and into a nearby wetland.

CHL sues town to overturn order forcing landfill closure the special permit declared valid, it is barred from re-litigating the validity of the permit under the doctrine of res judicator," Moehrke states in the lawsuit.

Moehrke did not return telephone calls to comment on the case.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group, SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), said he doesn't see anything new in this latest lawsuit by CHL.

"The truth is, when Moehrke says the town sued CHL and declared the permit valid, he's lying," McNabb said. "CHL brought that suit against the town. Res judicator only works to prevent the plaintiff from bringing suit on a matter that should have been covered in a previous suit. This is the only possible wedge Moehrke has, and he's just grasping at straws."

McNabb said he believes CHL is bringing the suit just to delay the closure of the landfill. SAFE members believe the town can get an injunction forcing CHL to shut down because it is in violation of the building inspector's order. But McNabb said CHL may be gambling that the courts will allow the landfill to stay open until this latest lawsuit is resolved. McNabb said land court cases take at least one to two years to resolve. He pointed to CHL's suit challenging the Water Resource District, which CHL filed in 1994 but was only resolved last week.

McNabb believes CHL's grand strategy is to try and stay open until 2001 when the state plans to lift the current moratorium on general refuse land filling.

"Their overall strategy has got to be to stay alive until 2001," McNabb said. "Once the state lifts the moratorium on general refuse permits, CHL could potentially reopen its Area V application. If they can stay on-line long enough, we could be talking about an Area VI."

The state has declared a need for more capacity for general refuse landfills in 2001. McNabb pointed out that the state always prefers to utilize existing landfills rather than allow new ones to open.

"I think we're in a race to 2001," McNabb said. "They're alive for now, even though we've officially shut them down."

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis acknowledged that he has received a copy of the suit and he is currently reviewing it before recommending any action from the town.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he will await DeRensis' decision before making a move.

CHL has been under siege in recent weeks from the ZBA, the building inspector and the courts. The Land Court upheld the town's Water Resource District boundary line last week, rejecting CHL's claims that the line was arbitrarily drawn to block the landfill's Area V expansion. Also last week, the Norfolk Superior Court upheld the health board's denial of CHL's proposed Area V expansion.

McNabb discovered the two violations that led to the latest lawsuit.

The first of the two alleged violations was discovered by McNabb last November when he found 7,800 square feet of material in a section of the landfill not approved for dumping. The second alleged violation was uncovered by McNabb in January when he discovered that CHL had never filed its special permit to operate a landfill in Cohasset with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. State law requires permits to be filed with the registry before becoming effective. Egan shut down CHL permanently on a technicality related to not filing the permit.

Part of the landfill sits in the town's Water Resource District, created in 1988. Landfills are prohibited from the district except for facilities that were in legal operation before enactment of the district. Egan ruled that CHL's failure to file the permit meant it wasn't in lawful operation prior to the creation of the water district and could not claim special pre-existing use status. The zoning board upheld Egan's decision, effectively shutting down the landfill for good.

The Norfolk Superior Court decision effectively denies CHL's proposed 27.5-acre Area V expansion. Because CHL is in violation of several of its permits, it also cannot go forward with its proposed vertical expansion.

McNabb plans to appear before the health board next month to ask its members to rescind CHL's site assignments. McNabb added that revoking the site assignment would force CHL to shut down forever.

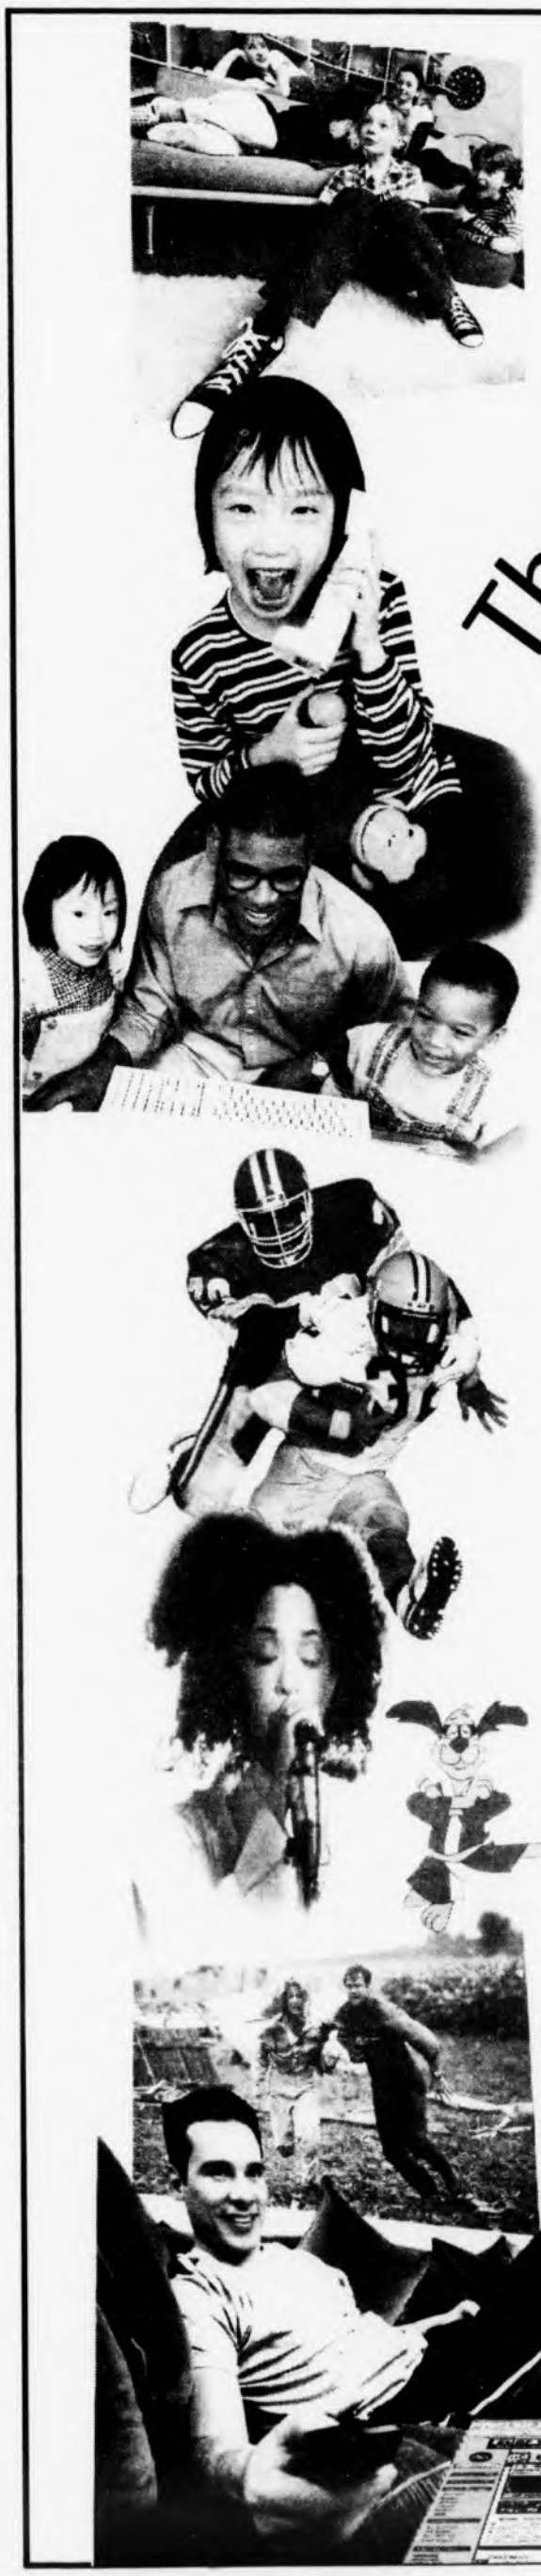
SCHOOL BRIEFS

Shea is new chairman



Richard Shea became the new school committee chairman April 9 when the new board met for the first time since the April 4 elections. He replaced former chairwoman Maureen Jerz. She did not seek reelection when her term expired. Kathy Ofsthun is the new vice-chairwoman. Joseph McElroy was elected secretary.

Teachers get go-ahead for master's program

The school board April 9 backed off its earlier reluctance to approve the enrollment of two Osgood School teachers in the same master's degree program. Instead, the panel approved the requests of four teachers at the same school to start the graduate education program.

Though the school committee has no say in tuition reimbursements for teachers, they do decide whether the teachers can enter a master's degree program. Ultimately, the degree means a bigger salary, and the salaries impact the operating budget. Former school board member Ralph Kidder at his final school board meeting April 2 challenged the superintendent's recommendation favoring the enrollment. Kidder said the school department was supposed to get "a return" on the investment in teachers. He questioned why four educators from the same school should go into the same graduate program. Kidder said one teacher in the program should be able to share information with colleagues.

April 9 none of the school committee members spoke against Hart's recommendation. But school board member Joseph McElroy said he hoped the question about how the teachers were giving back to the system would come up again. He said it should be part of upcoming contract negotiations.

Water commission to pursue second water tank again

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Water Commission didn't get everything it wanted from town meeting. Voters did approve an additional $200,000 to pursue a site for a second water tank on Scituate Hill. But town meeting voters did not approve a request by the commissioners to change town bylaws to allow water tanks in residential zones to be exempt from normal height restrictions as a matter of right.

The water commissioners will take the money and consider their next move when they meet on April 30. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said he plans to suggest that the water commissioners submit both the Bear Hill and Scituate Hill proposals to the zoning board of appeals (ZBA) for a special permit.

The water commission had submitted the Bear Hill proposal to the ZBA previously, but withdrew the request at the last minute because of indications that the special permit would be denied. McNabb said that even though the commission has an extra $200,000 for Scituate Hill, it still favors Bear Hill.

"Bear Hill is still our first choice because the town owns the land and we don't want to spend the extra money if we don't have to," McNabb said. "If Bear Hill were approved next month, we could build that tank by Labor Day."

The town is planning to erect a new water tank somewhere, and last year allocated $1.4 million for the project. The tank is needed to improve water pressure in town and to increase the amount of water available for fighting fires. Water commissioners had planned to follow the recommendation of town engineer Tutela Engineering and build the tank on town-owned land on Bear Hill.

But residents who live within view of Bear Hill and the existing tank fiercely oppose a second tank in their line of sight. Opponents of the Bear Hill site claim Scituate Hill would be a far better location for a new water tower. Bear Hill is 158 feet high and would require a 62-foot-high tank to achieve adequate water pressure. But the highest elevation on Scituate Hill is 14 feet higher than Bear Hill at 172 feet. This higher elevation would require a shorter tank to achieve the same water pressure as Bear Hill.

McNabb said that placing the same tank on the highest elevation of Scituate Hill would cost an additional $38,000 without land acquisition costs. But the land on Scituate Hill is privately owned. Local resident Glenn Pratt and developer Wayne Sawchuk said they believed the town could obtain a parcel on Scituate Hill at no cost if it struck a deal with the owner of the land.

"The water department has seriously underestimated the value of this land. They have allocated only a fraction of the funds they need to take this land. We have already rejected offers that are twice the amount the water department has allocated."

DEVELOPER, NOEL COLLINS

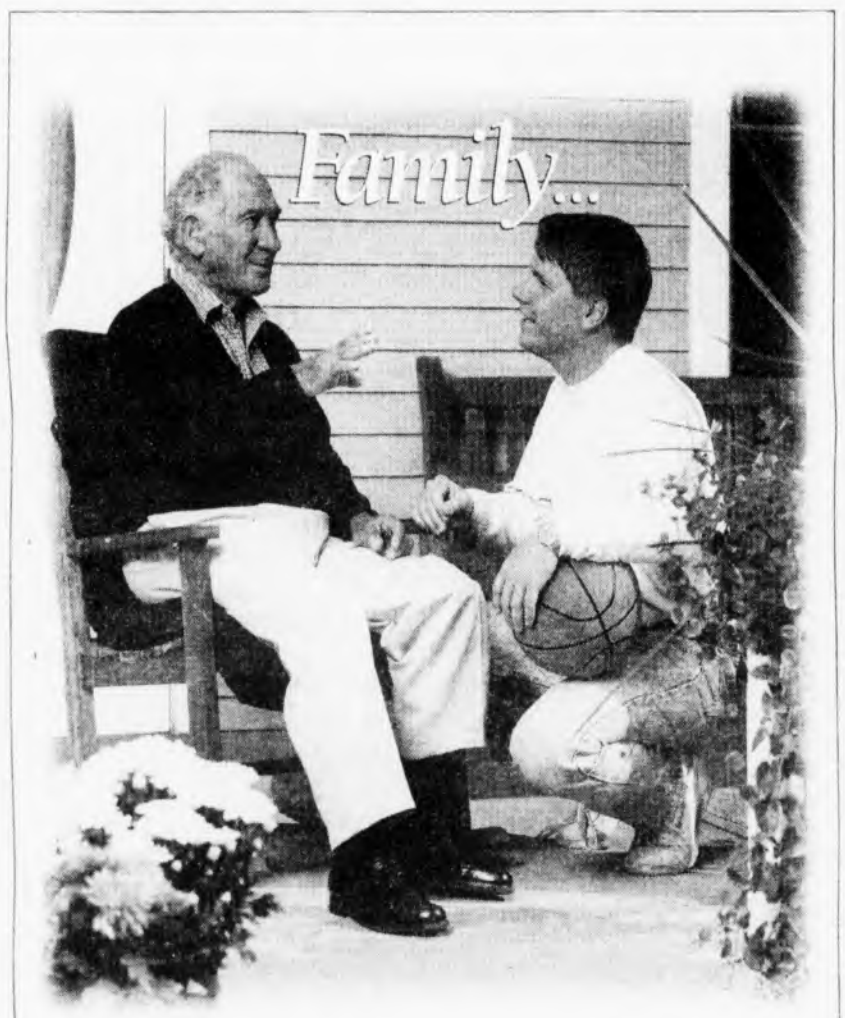
However, the land on Bear Hill is slated for development by Mario Susi and Sons and developer Noel Collins. The water commission has been working with Collins and Susi to try and buy land for the tank for $1. However, both the water commission and the developers want to locate their projects at the top of the hill. There are other problems, as well. Collins and Susi want to place a residential development on Scituate Hill. But the land is zoned industrial, and residential development is not allowed. Collins and Susi would have to get either a variance or a change in bylaws to build a residential development.

McNabb has said previously that he thinks the water commissioners would support a zoning change if it meant the town could get an appropriate parcel of free land on Scituate Hill for a water tank. But town meeting would have to make the final decision on whether to re-zone the land.

McNabb said he thinks the deal with Collins and Susi is dead because both sides want the same parcel of land. Collins offered the water commission a parcel of land about 250-feet behind the peak and at a lower elevation. But that site would cost an additional $371,000 to engineer without any land costs. McNabb said the $200,000 should be more than enough to seize a couple of acres of land at the top of the hill by eminent domain.

"The water commission is empowered by the legislature to initiate an eminent domain action without town meeting approval," McNabb said. "It's just a matter of identifying what we want to take, drawing up a set of plans, voting it in and it's done. But I want to emphasize that we haven't discussed that option yet, and Bear Hill remains our first choice."

McNabb said the water commission will also have to explore whether it can get ZBA approval to build a water tank on land it does not yet own.



Collins said he thought there was still time for the water commissioners to hammer out an agreement for a mutually agreeable site for a tank on Scituate Hill with a land cost to the town of only $1.

"The water department has seriously underestimated the value of this land," Collins said. "They have allocated only a fraction of the funds they need to take this land. We have already rejected offers that are twice the amount the water department has allocated."

Meanwhile, Collins and Susi are continuing with their plans to develop the land. Collins said he is planning to meet with the Cohasset and Hull sewer departments to discuss ways to hook a development into the sewer system. If the town will not allow the developers to rezone the land for residential development, then they plan to develop an industrial park, Collins said.

Collins pointed out that there is no need for the water tank to be placed at the top of the hill. Collins walked the site with water commissioners and is sure the two parties can come to an amicable agreement.

"I am hopeful that there is still some common ground for an agreement for the tank," Collins said. "This water commission has to take into account that they could receive the land for $1, and it doesn't make sense to steam-roll this project through."

Proponent plans to revive proposal for subdivision

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Two years after the planning board deemed his project "not in the best interests of the town," a Weymouth school teacher is expected to try to revive a controversial subdivision.

Steven Corey of 16 Keating Circle in Weymouth wants to build 28 new houses on the former Curtis Estate off Jerusalem Road. He is scheduled to come before the planning board May 6.

Corey could not be reached for comment before the Mariner went to press Wednesday. His lawyer Charles Humphries and his civil engineer Robert E. Hannigan Associates did not return telephone calls.

The development faces obstacles primarily due to the lack of sewer service in the area. Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild repeated Wednesday his board has not changed its position against additional development in the environmentally sensitive area. The commissioners voted not to expand service in north Cohasset to accommodate new developments.

"The sewer commission has voted to reserve any additional capacity for existing homes. central Cohasset is a different story, but we're not making capacity available in north Cohassset," he said.

In 1996, the Jerusalem Road Limited Partnership got some support from Hull officials for a Cohasset sewer expansion. Hull has already agreed to a deal to treat wastewater from some homes in north Cohasset and the Hull sewer plant probably has the capacity to take on more. But Guild said they did not have similar luck this time.

"They went to Hull a few months ago," he said. "The Hull people told them they would have to arrange it through the Cohasset sewer commission."

Planning board Chairman Al Moore said he would not be surprised if the sewer issue ultimately gets thrashed out in court. He expects sewers there someday. At that time, the land could be developed. But there are more problems with the plan than just the lack of a sewer tie in, he pointed out. The topography is basically ledge and drainage is a problem. During the severe storms over the past three years, Rattlesnake Run virtually turned into a river.

"We want to make sure anything built on the site is not going to be under water in a storm," Moore said and pointed out other safety issues. The road into the subdivision looked too steep in the original plan. It was rimmed by "20 foot cliffs on each side dropping into the road," he said. A land swap with one of the abutters might solve the problem of the steep angle. Nonetheless, the road was still too long for a subdivision.

Moore said the rules about subdivision roads differ from regular streets. Town streets typically connect at least two places. But subdivision roads normally are the only way in and out of a densely populated area. A road too long poses a hazard for fire and emergency workers.

Nonetheless, he suggested the plan might eventually pass muster with the board if the project were scaled down, roughly in half. As it stands, the 28 house lots in the plan look like too many. But 12 or 15 might work. He also said the planning board took public comments into consideration. The public has turned out in large numbers against developing Curtis Estate in the past.

Moore did not yet know if the plan from the Jerusalem Road Limited Partnership differed from the preliminary site plan Corey submitted in March 1996. It was turned down then but in an unusual way.

Moore said the 1996 review took an unusual turn because the applicant presented a "preliminary site plan." Though such plans exist on paper, he never saw one submitted as "an actual application." However, as he learned later, the board's review of a preliminary plan changed the ground rules the board had to follow later when Corey came back with a "definitive plan." Basically, the planning board had to act on the review within 90 days after the plan was filed with the Town Clerk. Otherwise, it would get an automatic OK.

The planning board never before dealt with a 90-day deadline in his recollection. The time frame is usually different.

"Ordinarily, we have all the time in the world," Moore said. "The clock doesn't start ticking until we close the public hearing." Nonetheless, the 1996 planning board did find out about the deadline for its decision before 90 days ran out. When the applicant realized the plan would be rejected, he withdrew it "without prejudice." Withdrawal meant the partnership could try again and would not have to come back with a plan that answered every objection the board spelled out in the reason for denial.

"It means they can come back and fight another day," he said. Moore will keep an open mind about the new plan though he has doubts the problems can be solved.

"It's a tough site. You get a sixth sense after sitting on the planning board awhile as to what's going to fly and what isn't." He found some problems with the subdivision that loom as "deal busters."

Moore said the planning board originally voted against the preliminary site plan for several reasons. First, the plan lacked a sewer hookup. Moreover, the road into the subdivision was too long and too steep.

"Those are not insignificant reasons for denial," he said. The sewer problem was also cited by abutter Joseph McElroy. He backed the commissioners' decision to reserve additional capacity for homes already standing.

McElroy, a school board member, was previously chairman of the committee on the Curtis Estate. The panel attempted to honor the wishes of George E. Curtis, the Brockton businessman who left the estate in a trust to benefit "needy and disabled women." McElroy said he was disappointed when the Attorney General's office rejected a proposal to build an Alzheimer's treatment center on the 55-acre property. Ultimately, the trust was broken in court. The 50 acres now owned by the partnership lie off Jerusalem Road in the area between Windy Hill Road and Black Rock Road opposite Straits Pond.

Three's a crowd?

Selectmen have a quorum at school board meeting

An open meeting law violation normally means serious business with the Norfolk County District Attorney's office. But the legal technicalities took on a comic dimension April 9 when three selectmen, in an apparently unintentional slip, turned up at the school board meeting.

Selectmen Chairwoman Ronnie McMorris and selectmen Merle Brown and Thomas Callahan arrived separately. Nonetheless, they made a quorum at 8:07 p.m. when the last arrival, Brown, turned up. He sat by himself at a considerable distance from his colleagues. McMorris, Callahan and Town Manager Mark Haddad sat together.

Haddad previously has challenged the view the selectmen must post a meeting notice 48 hours in advance when a majority of their board attends another board's meeting. Haddad said earlier as long as the selectmen did not deliberate, he saw no violation of the open meetings law.

Brown said Tuesday he knew McMorris would be at the meeting. But he did not expect Callahan to show up.

"I knew Ronnie was going," he said. "She was going to be in on the Executive Session to discuss contract negotiations." McMorris is the new selectmen Chairwoman. Brown said she is getting "more involved" with the other boards. He did not know why Callahan was there but speculated it might be because he is a newly elected selectmen.

Callahan did not return calls to the Mariner before press time. However, he did attend several school board meetings during the campaign season. April 9 he left before the meeting ended.

COHASSET MARINER

Duxbury educator Mary-Lynn Currier was the first U.S. woman to cross the finish line Monday afternoon in the 102nd running of the Boston Marathon. Currier, who came in 11th overall in the women's division, had a personal best time of 2:35:18. She is pictured winning "The Run for the Ribbon", a 10K race held just two weeks ago in Kingston.

Currier states her case to run with the elite

Cohasset race winner is top U.S. woman at Boston Marathon

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

If you ran in races over the past month around Cohasset and Kingston you can say that you knew former Duxbury teacher's aide Mary-Lynn Currier before she hit the big time.

What the St. Francis Xavier of Hyannis school teacher did Monday was use the Boston Marathon as her coming out party to the rest of the running world and in the process stake her claim as one of the elite runners in this country.

Currier, 34, was the first American woman to cross the finish line Monday afternoon at the Boston Marathon while pulling in a personal best time of 2:35:18 in the 102nd running of the most elite race of its kind in the world.

You are still more than likely to catch Currier around the halls of Duxbury High School. She works as a substitute teacher in the after-school program and will also be instructing a computer class at DHS over summer break.

One day after her monumental accomplishment when most of us would still be seeking extensive medical attention, Currier sounded none the worse for wear.

"I'm a little overwhelmed by the attention I've been getting but physically I feel fine. The conditions were great for a marathon" said Currier from her Plymouth home Tuesday afternoon. "I don't think it's really hit me yet. All I really wanted to do was qualify for the upcoming Olympic trials" for the 2000 Games in Sydney, Australia.

"I had no idea that I would end up feeling as good as I did. I felt strong out there and I just kept going with that," she continued. "The fans were great. The girls at Wellesley College were out there yelling their support. I was so emotional that I started to cry right there."

To that end, her time puts her in as the 2nd ranked runner in woman marathoner at present in the nation, only 20 seconds behind the leader.

Although it was Colorado's Libbie Hickman who got most of the publicity before and during the race, Currier would be the one on top at the end of the grueling 26.2 mile endurance contest.

"She (Hickman) passed me around the hills in Newton and Wellesley, but I kept her in my sights and just ran my own race," Currier explained. "Around Heartbreak Hill she started slowing down some and that's when I sat back and reeled her in. That's when I knew that nobody was going to catch me. I never looked back."

This was Currier's fourth time running Boston (including a 13th place in 1994), she's run close to 40 marathon races in all and placed 18th overall at the 1996 Olympic trials but that was still not enough get her an "elite runner" status with the Boston Athletic Association for her hometown marathon.

The elite runners generally are put up the night before at a Boston area hotel among other amenities and are placed closer to the starting line in Hopkington, giving them a much better opportunity to get off to a good start.

Such was not the case for Currier who started the race back in the pack, a good fifty yards from the start line and losing as much as 20 seconds after the shotgun start before she even crossed the starting area.

"The elite runners do have it easier the morning of the race and get some special treatment," said Currier, who was up at dawn race day and on her way into Boston by 6:30 a.m. when most of the other top runners were eating their Wheaties, reading the morning newspaper or still fast asleep in their hotel room.

Davis Track dedication set for May 7

A varsity track meet against Hull on Thursday, May 7 will have a little more meaning than your average South Shore League match-up.

On that day the Skippers will help dedicate the running track at Alumni Field in the name of former Cohasset educator and athletic coach Charlie Davis.

The dedication ceremonies will begin at 3:30 p.m. at the high school and should be something to remember, said Cohasset athletic director Clark Chatterton.

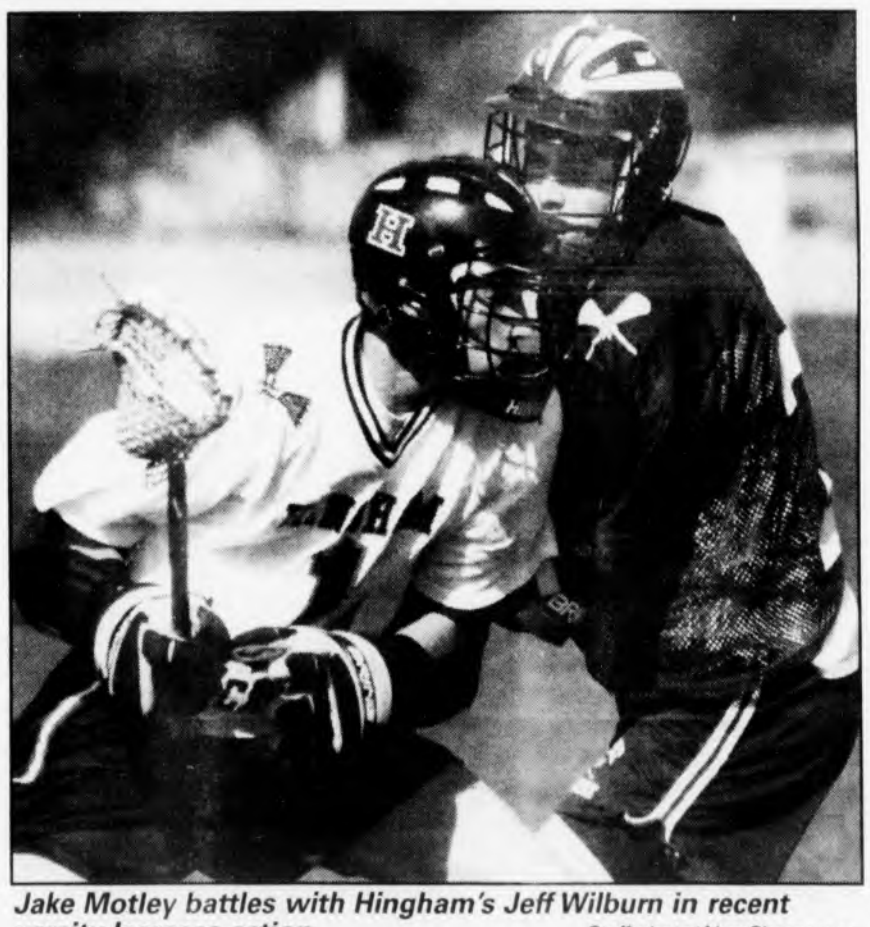
"We've invited just about every faculty member in Cohasset from the 60s, 70s, and 80s to the event," said Chatterton. "We are expecting that this is going to be a real nice time for all involved."

Davis, formerly of Marshfield, was a respected Math teacher and track coach from when he came to Cohasset High School in 1961. He coached through the 1970s and consistently fielded some of the top track teams on the South Shore.

After retiring from the coaching ranks he continued to be a leader at the school, eventually taking over as chairman of the Math department at CHS.

Davis died unexpectedly in 1985 from a blood clot in his leg that surfaced after an injury.

CHS principal Curtis Collins and Chatterton both worked alongside Davis at the high school. They spoke about their departed friend shortly after the school committee voted to bestow this honor on Davis last December.



"Charlie was just a great guy and a marvelous teacher in the classroom," remembered Collins. "He had a great sense of humor, but those kids learned in his classroom. You couldn't ask for a better teacher."

"He was beloved and at all times a true gentleman," added Chatterton. "Charlie was a man of great integrity who did a great deal of good for Cohasset High School.

"There are a lot of people still here at CHS who worked side-by-side with Charlie who are extremely happy to see that we have decided to honor his memory in this fashion.

"It's very deserving."

For more information on the dedication ceremonies, contact Cohasset High School at 383-6100, or the CHS athletic department at 383-6103.

Both Cohasset junior lacrosse clubs open with wins

For the first time, the Cohasset youth lacrosse program is fielding two teams in one season, and both 12-and-under squads opened the season with wins on April 19.

The Cohasset White squad, literally cut in half by vacation, went to Marshfield with just 14 players, three of them normally part of the Cohasset Blue team. Despite facing a Marshfield team with more than twice as many players, Cohasset controlled the tempo of the game.

Robby Carpenter scored two first half goals and Mike Ernst added a third-quarter tally to give Cohasset a 3-0 lead entering the fourth quarter. Marshfield rallied with two goals and had the chance to tie the game on a tired Cohasset team, but Nick Murphy came up with the last two of his 12 saves to snuff the rally and give Cohasset the game.

"You could single out virtually all of our players for doing well in this game," said Coach Chuck Jaffe. "With so few kids on the team, they all dug deep, played smart and did what necessary to win. It wasn't a pretty game, but we'll take it."

The coaches immediately rushed home from Marshfield for a game between Cohasset Blue and Falmouth. Paul Digan's first-half hat trick powered Cohasset to a 6-3 lead at the break. Michael Devine scored twice and added one of his two assists in the second half to help Cohasset build a lead and hold off a late Falmouth rally to win 12-8.

D.J. Silvia—who practiced with the team for the first time just a week before the game—scored two goals and added an assist. Nick Murphy scored twice, Andrew O'Keefe , Ryan Tufts and Chris Barber had single tallies with Digan and Dewayne Morris also adding assists.

Timothy Pilczak snuffed 11 Falmouth shots in his first game in the goal, and also sparked several Cohasset fast breaks with quick outlet passes after his saves.

"This was a very good win against a team that had good stick skills," said Jaffe. "The best part of our game was that everyone got involved and carried the action. Obviously, the credit goes to the guys who scored, but I was pleased that, literally, every one of our midfielders and attack had legitimate scoring chances. That bodes well for the rest of the season."

Cohasset plays in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nations' largest junior lacrosse program. Its season runs until mid-June. Both the Blue and White squads play again on Sunday, April 26 at home. The Blue squad faces off against Scituate at 11:30, to be followed at 1 with the White team playing Duxbury.

CHS aces swing perfectly into April vacation

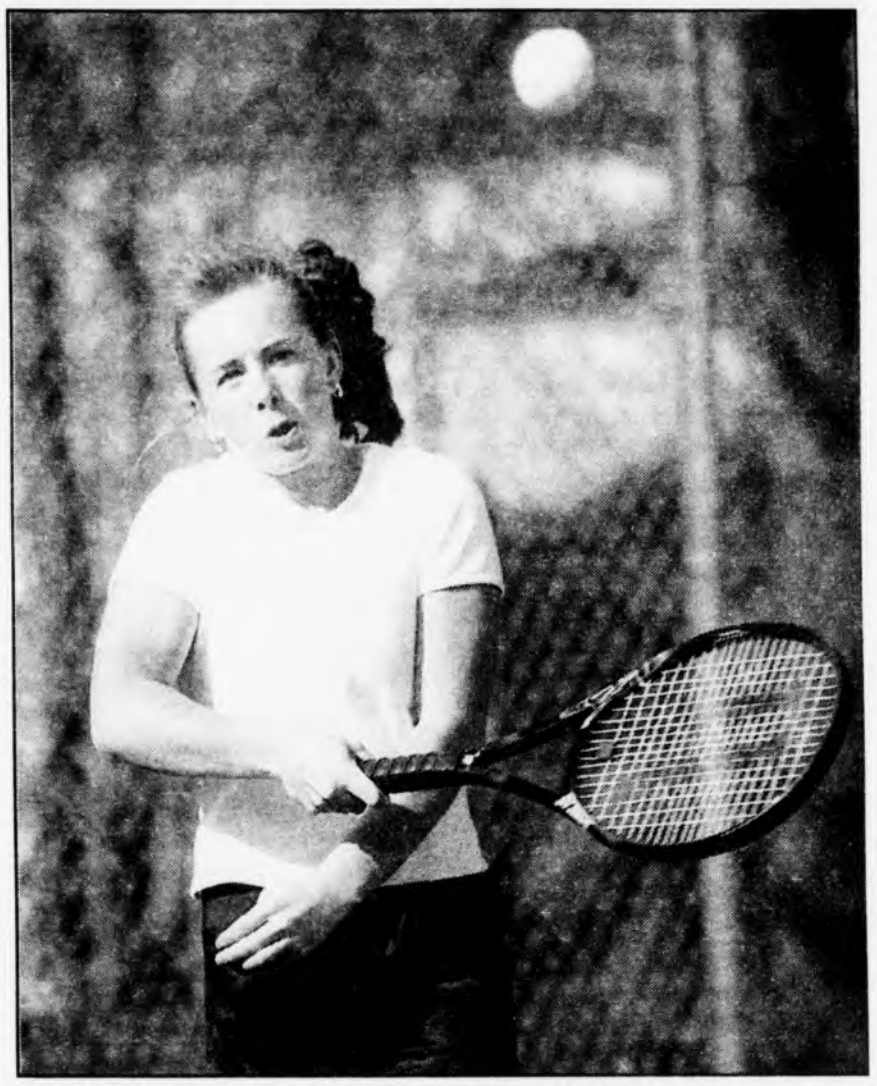
Some prime time talent , solid depth and a smart little bit of bribery can take you a long way these days.

In fact, it has the CHS girls' tennis team on top of the South Shore League with a perfect 4-0 record to start the season.

"So far, so good," said head coach Sarah Meehan, breathing a sigh of relief after the Lady Skippers got by division rival Hanover 4-1 without the services of their #1 and #3 singles players, Kate and Kelly Stone.



After finishing in second place to Scituate in league play for the last two seasons, all the experts have guaranteed that there would not be a three-peat for the Sailors. They would be correct as Scituate has moved out of the SSL, leaving it wide open for anyone to claim.

Since somebody's always got to be the best, Meehan said it might as well be her girls.

"We've never been able to win the league title and I think that this year is as good as any to change that," said Meehan, who is entering her seventh year as head coach. "This could be our year. The title is out there up for grabs and if anyone is going to take it, it might as well be us."

After compiling an impressive 14-2 record last season (both losses to Scituate), Cohasset's hopes don't seem to be so far fetched.

Meehan has learned to use a little bit of psychology in her coaching by dangling a carrot in front of her team. This year it's a night out at a local restaurant on her if they with the SSL title.

Caitlin Flint returns a serve for the Lady Skippers tennis team. The squad is off to a quick 4-0 start to the season.

"We've been going pretty go so far, but I still sweat out every point no matter who we are playing ," admitted Meehan.

"We are little smaller of a group (12 players) than we have been in the past, but that's not really a bad thing. Everyone has a role on the team and all the players know that even if they aren't in the starting line-up they still are an important part of the team. Everybody plays a part."

Playing one of the bigger parts on the team is sophomore Kate Stone, who has returned for her second season as the top singles player for the Lady Skippers.

"I've known her since she was 12-years-old and every time you give her a challenge she rises to it," said Meehan of her young tennis star. "She is just an exceptional player and an even better young lady."

At the second spot is junior tri-captain Katie Brister, who Meehan said would be "the number on player on any other team in the league. She's that good."

"Katie has really stepped forward this year," added Meehan. "She came through for us against Hanover, taking Kate's place for that match."

Continuing the Stone family's tennis excellence is third singles player, Kelly Stone.

Only an eighth grader, Meehan has already targeted Stone for greatness.

"There's not much of a doubt that she is going to be a top singles player. It's just a matter of time," said Meehan. "She's got it all. A great head for the game, a beautiful stroke and a tremendous will to win. Kelly is just a tremendous competitor"

When the Stone sisters were away for last week's Hanover match, Cohasset showed their strong depth as sophomore Jessie Zerendowd and freshman Ary Afshar, who had never played in a varsity singles match before, stepped in and filled the bill in the win.

Looking at the doubles scene, Meehan boldly predicted that her number one team of eighth grader Kaitlyn Flint and KC Camacho would go undefeated this season.

"We've never been able to win the league title and I think that this year is as good as any to change that," said Meehan, who is entering her seventh year as head coach. "This could be our year. The title is out there up for grabs and if anyone is going to take it, it might as well be us."

CHS GIRLS TENNIS COACH SARAH MEEHAN

"I just don't think that there is another team in the league that can touch them right now," she said. "Kaitlyn is just as good an all-around athlete as you are ever going to see and KC is a tremendous player."

Most recently at the second doubles spot has been tri-captain Jessica Stevens and Zarendowd, when she's not filling in on the singles scene.

"They've become as solid a second team as you could ask for," said Meehan. "Both of them are very strong players and they communicate very well on the court."

The third captain, Sarah MacDonald, as well as lacrosse transfer Katie Devine and Marcina Boone will also see some action for the Skippers this season.

FISHING STORY

Springing into the fishing season

BY MARK TRASK

The flowers hang thick and buttery on every forsythia in creation. A green haze of ready-to-burst leaves adorns every tree. Lines whiz over smooth millpond water and gurgling streams as the season of dreams is upon us. For an angler that dream may be catching an elusive record fish, one that has surpassed all others.

Jim Tribble of Scituate celebrated his brand new fishing license by tangling with such a fish in the Russell Mill Stream of Plymouth. Jim is new in the ranks of licensed anglers at 15 but has years of experience with rod in hand. His fish may be a record for the year but Hemingway wouldn't give it a second glance.

Each year the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife (freshwater) and Division of Marine Fisheries (saltwater) provide awards for prize-winning fish of many species. Twenty-one categories of freshwater fish are included in the program. The Saltwater Fishing Derby has 24 gamefish it makes awards for.

Freshwater fish in the award program (and the minimum award size) include brook trout — 2 lbs.; brood salmon — 10 lbs.; brown trout — 6 lbs.; bullhead — 1 lb., 12 oz.; carp — 15 lbs.; chain pickerel — 4 lbs., 8 oz.; channel catfish — 6 lbs.; crappie/calico —2 lbs.; lake trout — 7 lbs.; landlocked salmon — 5 lbs.; largemouth bass — 7 lbs., 8 oz.; northern pike — 15 lbs.; rainbow trout — 4 lbs.; shad — 7 lbs.; smallmouth bass — 4 lbs., 8 oz.; sunfish — 1 lb.; tiger muskie — 10 lbs.; walleye — 5 lbs.; white catfish — 4 lbs.; white perch — 1 lb., 8 oz.; yellow perch — 1 lb., 8 oz.

Jim weighed in with a yellow perch. Its 14" length and 10" girth tipped the scale at 1 lb., 10 oz. He is now qualified for a bronze pin commemorating his catch. Should that end up being the largest yellow perch caught in the state, he gets a gold pin. Congrats Jim!

The Saltwater Derby is larger with awards being made in men's, women's and junior's divisions. Winners in each division receive Paul Revere Bowls, symbolic of the Governor's Cup.

While some of the species in the derby may sound exotic, there are many familiar fish that we have had the opportunity of catching. The list of saltwater fish (and the minimum entry size listed in pounds) includes bluefish (10), blue marlin (250), bluefin tuna (300), blue shark (150), bonito (7), cod (25), cusk (20), false albacore (10), fluke (5), haddock (8), halibut (50), mackerel (2), mako shark (100), pollock (20), scup (2), sea bass (3), striped bass (30), swordfish (150), tautog (8), weakfish (10), white marlin (60), winter flounder (2), wolffish (20), yellowfin tuna (50).

Pete reports an acquaintance of his got into the schoolies for a 20-plus count. The biggest? Eighteen inches Pete gestured. Andy Collins took first-fish honors in the shadow of the bridge over the Weir River on George Washington Boulevard. Nils Sceery enticed his first of the year from Cohasset Harbor. Flies took a half dozen in the North River at the Union St. Bridge.

Currier states her case to run with the elite

"It wasn't the best way to begin a day that you're supposed to be running in a marathon," she said with a laugh. "In my heart I believe I belonged up there with the elite runners."

Currier has dealt with bigger obstacles than the BAA with just as much success. An asthmatic, she recently had to take more than four months off from any training after a bout with chronic Lyme disease.

"That really knocked me for a loop," said Currier. "When I did get back to training, I had to make sure that I only did what my body was going to be able to take. I had to step back and give my body the time it needed to properly heal."

"She (Hickman) passed me around the hills in Newton and Wellesley, but I kept her in my sights and just ran my own race," Currier explained. "Around Heartbreak Hill she started slowing down some and that's when I sat back and reeled her in. That's when I knew that nobody was going to catch me. I never looked back."

MARY-LYNN CURRIER

Now back as a picture of perfect health, Currier said she's running better than she ever has.

"I'm smarter now about my training," she admitted. "I'm 34-years-old but I'm still out there setting personal records and running with the top runners in the world."

One of those personal records she talked about was set at the Cohasset By-The-Sea race less than one month ago and Currier continued her winning ways just two weeks ago when she won Sacred Heart's "Run for the Ribbon" in Kingston outright as the first person, man or woman, to cross the finish line.

Officials from the Pittsburgh Marathon have already contacted her for their race next month. It would be a chance for a larger paycheck than the $2,600 she picked up Monday, but Currier said it's not going to happen. She needs more time than a couple off weeks to recover from Boston.

Currier said the next big goal for her is the trials for the 2000 Summer Olympic Games and to shave about five minutes off her Boston time on her way to getting there.

But, according to Currier, the only way she's going to get there is with a little help from her friends.

"The only way that I can see getting to the next level is by totally dedicating myself to the cause, which would mean giving up my job and training full-time for the Olympic trials," said Currier.

Physically, Currier has no doubts she could accomplish her goal. Financially, it's not going to happen without some sponsors.

The Power Bar company has given its support to Currier, for which she is extremely grateful, but more help is needed for her to properly train for the trials.

"It's a fact of life that you need to totally dedicate yourself to something like this in order to get to the Olympic level," said Currier. "You need to do it for a living."

Sudden hearing loss

Immediate treatment increases recovery chance

By Esther Csapo Rastegari, RN, EdM
CORRESPONDENT

You wake up in the morning and right way you know something is different.

Yesterday was just a regular day. You went to bed as usual last night, but this morning you don't feel right. Perhaps you are nauseous or dizzy. You may have tinnitus, a ringing in your ears. But as you listen for the morning sounds to which you are accustomed, it dawns on you — you can't hear out of one ear.

How could that be? About 4,000 people develop sudden hearing loss (SHL) each year in the United States, with 15,000 new cases reported annually worldwide. Sufferers are most commonly in their late 40s. About one third awaken with the hearing loss. Most individuals suffer the hearing loss in one ear, with about four percent having both (bilateral) ears involved.

How does this happen, and what can you do about it?

Sudden hearing loss is usually defined as a loss of hearing, usually of sensorineural (sensory plus neurological) origin of more than 30dB (decibels) in three connected frequencies (pitch) in less than three days.

What does this mean? To understand this, it helps to be familiar with how we perceive sound. As with our other senses, the main work takes place in the brain, not in the ear. Sound is basically the vibration of air. The loudness is measured in decibels (dB), while the pitch is measured in Hertz (Hz). We can think of sound as a wavy line moving between two straight lines, or like a train moving on a railroad track. The train represents the distance between the tracks. The wider the train, the louder the sound, the greater its amplitude. This is measured in dBs.

The pitch is related to the speed of the vibration (its fre quency), how close together the train cars are to one another. A long car seems to move slowly before our eyes, while short cars move quickly. The long car would have a low pitch, while the short cars, moving with greater frequency, would have a high pitch. When we lose hearing, it can be in terms of pitch (some low sounds we could hear, but not higher-pitched ones), and/or in terms of its loudness.

Hearing loss is broken down into two main categories: conductive and sensorineural. Conductive hearing loss refers to a problem in the way sound is transferred from the environment through the outer ear (the part we see attached to our heads) into the middle and inner parts of the ear. A buildup of earwax is the most common cause of hearing loss related to the outer ear. Once the wax is removed, hearing returns. Fluid due to an ear infection and a ruptured eardrum are other common conditions affecting hearing. If a structure inside the ear has been permanently damaged, hearing is less likely to be restored.

Nerve deafness

Sudden hearing loss is usually of sensorineural origin, and is sometimes referred to as nerve deafness. For the brain to perceive sound, the nerves in the ear must transmit the message from the inner ear to the brain. If these nerves are damaged, hearing cannot take place.

Not all sensorineural hearing loss is sudden. Exposure to loud noises or music can affect the inner ear and lead to hearing loss. As we age, there can be deterioration of the structures of the inner ear, leading to partial or complete deafness. SHL has been associated with medical conditions such as multiple sclerosis, leukemia, sickle cell disease, syphilis, infections both bacterial and viral, mumps and certain medications (usually reserved for life-threatening situations). It is important to rule out these potential causes, so that they can be treated properly. For the majority of cases, however, the cause is unknown or idiopathic.

The majority of individuals with SHL are healthy, with no known medical condition. There are four theories of what causes these cases of idiopathic sudden hearing loss: viruses, vascular problems, auto-immunity and breaks of the membrane of the inner ear. Different treatments have been developed, based on the believed cause. Treatments based on the vascular theory try to improve the circulation of blood to the ear, believing that this was in some way compromised, leading to the loss in hearing. Such treatments may involve the use of intravenous contrast dyes, or a gaseous mixture known as carbogen.

Since some studies have shown the blood of sufferers to be thicker, more viscous, than usual, some treatments have focused on the use of anticoagulants, or blood thinners. The auto-immune theory is based on research showing that the inner ear has its own immune system and is able to produce its own antibodies. Steroids have been used for some patients, but have been mainly successful for those with a moderate, mid-frequency hearing loss. All in all, no one treatment is clearly superior, or effective in most cases.

Get immediate help

Who has the best chance for recovery after suffering from sudden hearing loss? Those who seek help right away have a much better prognosis than those who avoid medical treatment, waiting for the problem to resolve on its own. What clouds this issue is that about 65 percent do recover spontaneously, although not all recover fully. Overall, about one third recover completely, one third recover some hearing, and one third show no improvement at all.

Prompt medical care is important to first address any underlying medical condition. Timely, accurate diagnosis can mean the difference between regaining one's hearing fully, or not at all. It does not, however, guarantee successful recovery. But not seeking care means lowering one's chances for reversing the hearing loss.

It is important to address the other problems that may occur at the same time as the loss in hearing. About 70 percent of individuals report tinnitus. This can be a mild ringing in the ear or an extremely loud roaring that doesn't stop. About 50 percent of those with SHL also complain of vertigo, or a dizziness, a sense of spinning. This can be so strong as to make movement difficult. The mere act of standing up and trying to walk to the bathroom can seem unbearable without holding on to someone. Many complain of a constant background noise, like static that makes concentration on other tasks difficult. Tinnitus can occur by itself, or can accompany hearing loss. About 36 million American suffer from some degree of tinnitus. If you suffer from tinnitus, you should be evaluated by an otolaryngologist (a physician specializing in problems of the ear, nose and throat), to diagnose and treat any underlying medical condition bringing on the tinnitus.

Sir Ian MacGregor

Sir Ian MacGregor of Bermuda and Scotland died Monday, April 13, while visiting friends in Somerset, England. He was 85.

Born in Kinlochleven, Scotland, Sir Ian earned degrees in engineering from Glasgow University and the University of Strathclyde, Scotland. He came to the United States during World War II as part of a team procuring heavy armaments for the British Government. He settled in the United States with his wife, Sibyl (Spencer) who died in 1996. They lived in Cohasset intermittently during the '90s.

Sir Ian became chief executive of Amax in 1966, a position he held until his retirement in 1979. His contributions to France resulted in his being decorated by the French Government with the order of Chevalier of the Legion d'Honneur in 1972. He returned to England at the request of then Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to run the British Steel Corporation and then the National Coal Board. MacGregor successfully reorganized both industries into efficient, profit-making nationalized companies. Mrs. Thatcher said upon hearing of his death, "He brought a breath of fresh air to British industry ...".

In 1986 Sir Ian was knighted by Queen Elizabeth for his service to the United Kingdom. He was a partner at the New York City investment banking firm of McFarland, Dewey and Co. He was inducted into Fortune Magazine's Business Hall of Fame. He continued various business pursuits, traveling around the world until his death last week.

Sir Ian leaves his daughter, Elizabeth MacGregor Bates, and granddaughters, Melissa and Meredith of Cohasset, and his son, Ian Charles Spencer MacGregor and grandchildren Lesley, Ian Kinloch II and James of Lake Forest, III. Memorial services will be held in London and New York City.

Sir Ian MacGregor

Preschool screening slated

A special needs preschool screening for three- and four-year-old children will be held between the hours of 9 a.m. and 12 p.m., Thursday, April 30. The screening will take place at the Joseph Osgood School by appointment only. The goal is to identify at an early stage, those children who may be experiencing developmental delays and may need further assessment. Please call the Student Services Office at 383-6104 to schedule an appointment.

Cohasset hosts post-prom party

The first annual Post-Prom All-Night Party will be held at Cohasset High School on June 3. The Prom will be held at the Marriott Long Warf in Boston. After after the Prom the students will return to CHS for a night of FUN. A Disc Jockey, a casino, and a breakfast are some of the events that are being planned.

An inclusive, chemical free All-Night Party for seniors has been very successful in many neighboring towns, including Hingham, Scituate, Hanover, and Marshfield. Local police and organizations strongly support the idea in these towns as the All-Night affair takes what may be a worrisome night and turns it into a safe sand fun experience for prom-goers.

The ticket price will be $30 per attendee. Student tickets will not cover the entire expenses for the evening. We need your donations to make this event a success.

Please help support this great event and send your donation to: Cohasset Post Prom Party, 16 Woodland Drive, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Also if you would like to volunteer to help on the committee. Please contact: Diane Dooley at 383-6448 or Margaret Tufts at 383-6985.

Defining limits for children

The Cohassett PSO presents "Setting Firm Limits - Dealing with Attitude", with Barbara Capaldo, M.Ed. Capaldo from the Insight Education Center for parents and teachers.

Could you use a little advice about successfully disciplining and defining limits for your children? Need some advice to deal constructively with the "attitude"? Then, come join us for a lively, interactive session presenting ideas applicable to children of all ages. Ms. Capaldo is a counselor, trainer, and consultant in the areas of parenting, child behavior and classroom management. She is the founder and Executive Director of Insight Education Center in Hanover. Bring your questions and gain some insight. Share your own experiences. Hear what other parents are doing. Let's learn together!

This session will be held Tuesday, April 28 from 7 p.m. until 9 p.m. at the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

More than 300 involved

Cohasseters really dig local garden clubs

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

For years, Barbara Dillon has gladly dirtied her hands to help plant flowers at the Lightkeeper's House on Government Island as a member of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

"It's a great organization for community projects but it's also social," said Dillon. "Everybody enjoys it."

Indeed, close to 300 people are involved in the three garden clubs in town — the Community Garden Club, the Cohasset Garden Club and the Amateur Garden Club.

But more than a love of gardening and flowers entices Cohasset residents young and old to join these garden clubs.

"Cohasset is well known for having a lot of people who care about the town," said Mary Hartshorne, president of the Cohasset Garden Club. "There are so many volunteers in town working to make Cohasset a nice place to be and the garden clubs are part of that."

The Community Garden Club, which was founded by Polly Logan in 1959, boasts the largest membership — more than 200 horticultural enthusiasts.

To accommodate the large crowd, the club's monthly meetings are held in church halls, said president Vivian Bobo.

The club's major beautification projects include the Virginia Knowles Garden in Cohasset Village between the Wilson House and the Cohasset Maritime Museum and the Knowles Watering Trough at the corner of Atlantic Avenue and Beach Street, where plantings are done four times a year.

The Cohasset Garden Club, although it has a smaller membership, has been flourishing since 1925. The club has 53 active members and about 20 summer and honorary members who work "to provide physical and financial support for civic and environmental projects" on a local and national level, Hartshorne said.

The club focuses its efforts on beautifying the Historical Society House on Summer Street and the Constitution Garden behind the South Shore Community Center.

Members of garden clubs join with the hope of blossoming into good gardeners — even if they've never picked up a gardening spade, Hartshorne said.

"They're all interested in having a nice garden at their house. Everybody's working on it," she said. "That's what's fun about gardens; they're not a permanent thing. They can always be nicer."

The Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts offers educational workshops and garden tours which the town's garden club members attend to improve their skills.

"I learned everything I know about horticulture through the garden club. It's a wonderful learning place," said Bobo, who has been a member of the Community Garden Club for about 30 years.

The fruits of the garden clubs' labor can be viewed at the Lightkeeper's House — a collaboration of the three clubs' beautification efforts.

That garden will be featured this summer in a week-long tour of exceptional gardens in Massachusetts. Public and private gardens from Scituate and Cohasset will be included in the Massachusetts Gardens on Tour 1998 on July 18 and 19.

Gardens at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island are maintained by members of the town's garden clubs.

Another garden club in town, the Amateur Garden Club, also helps to beautify the town. Its members could not be reached for comment by press time.

Gardening pair featured in Art in Bloom

Through the Cohasset Garden Club, members Joan Shockman and Brenda Urmson are participating in this year's Museum of Fine Arts' "Art in Bloom" exhibit in Boston, which opens next week.

Shockman and Urmson are designing a flower arrangement to accompany a 19th-century Norwegian impressionist painting by Edvard Munch called "Summer Night's Dream."

"There are a lot of dark greens and browns. It's going to be a hard one to work with," said Shockman, a 12-year member of the garden club who's participating in the exhibit for the third time.

The exhibit includes the work of 72 representatives from New England garden clubs displayed next to selected masterpieces from the museum's collection.

"It's all in how different people interpret what they are complementing. It's really fun to see all the other arrangements," Shockman said.

"Art in Bloom" opens April 27 and runs through April 30.

"The price comparison information supplied by Boston Gas appeared to prove the Oilheat Council's case. It shows that it costs about $204 more per year to heat a 2,200 square foot home with gas than it does with oil — $1,014 for gas vs. $810 for oil."

As power battle wages between boards

Special town meeting on sewer in pipeline

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen did not slam the door this week on the sewer commission's request that they call a special town meeting for the north Cohasset sewer project.

That is despite a turf war between the sewer commission and selectmen over who has the authority to award construction contracts..

Selectmen will invite sewer commissioners to their meeting May 5 to have them explain their reasoning for wanting a special town meeting to revisit the now $9.9 million sewer project to provide sewer service to about 277 homes in the north Cohasset area including those around Straits Pond.

> "We feel the people who are going to be serviced, should decide how it's going to be handled."
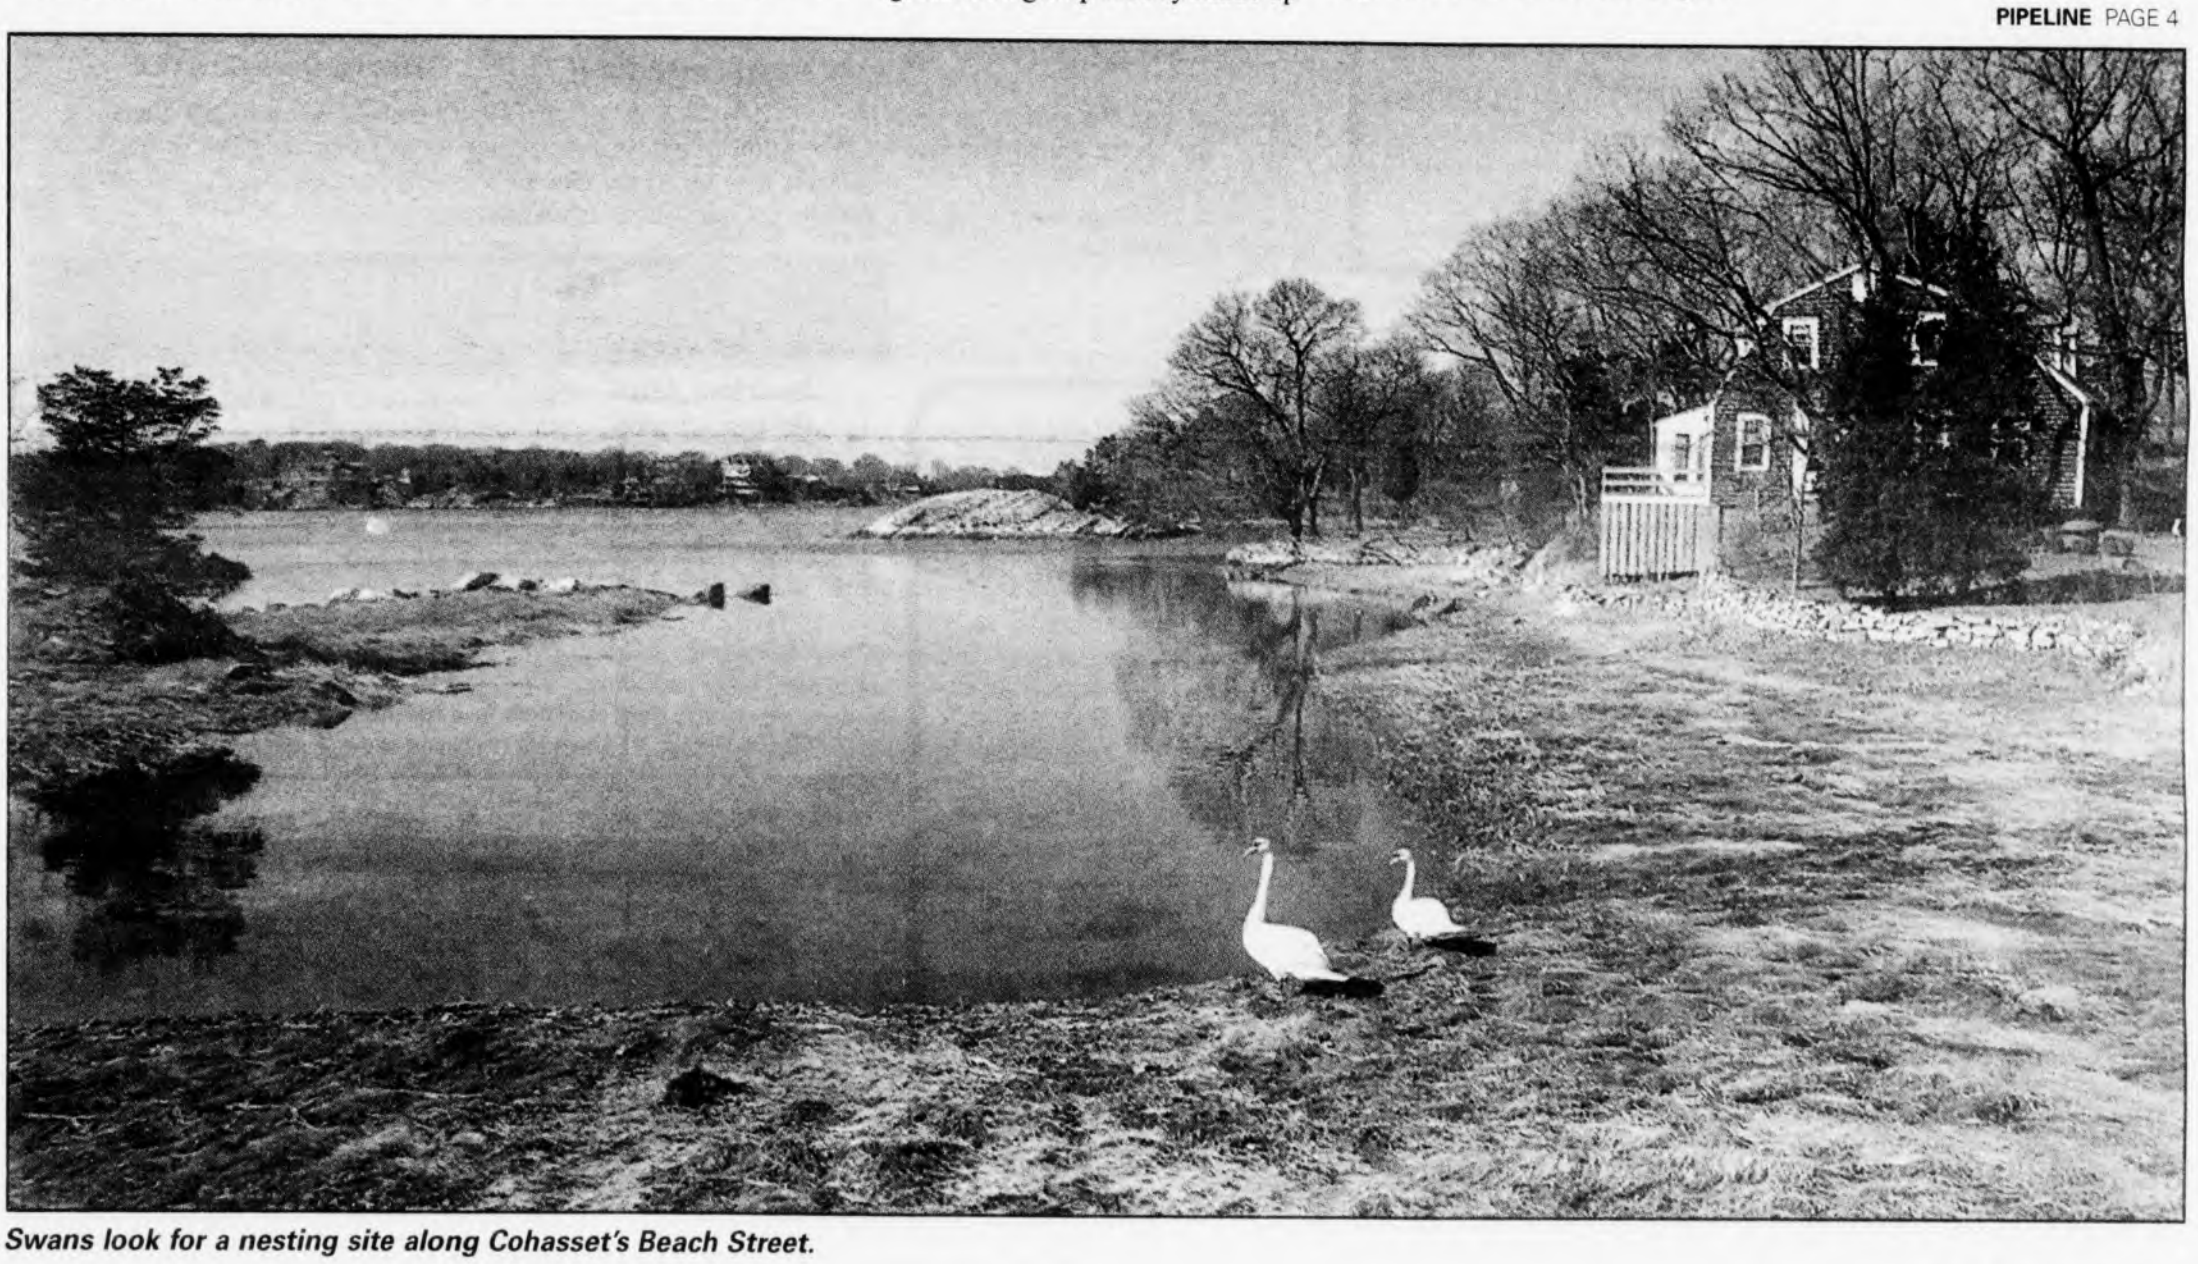
> GARY VANDERWEIL, SEWER COMMISSIONER.



Saying she was concerned about the $3,000 cost to conduct a special town meeting, Lisa Bumstead, 111 Nichols Road, who is spokeswoman for Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES), asked selectmen why they would bother "going through the motions." CEES is a grassroots group mostly made up of homeowners in the Little Harbor area whose successful lobbying effort helped defeat the sewer funding plan at the annual town meeting.

But selectmen said they wanted to see what the sewer commissioners — who did not attend Monday's meeting — had to say.

"We need to hear their reasoning and understand the request (for a special town meeting). If there is a substantive reason, we need to hear it," Selectman Nan Roth said.

If selectmen, who have the authority to call a special town meeting, do not call for one — sewer commissioners hope north Cohasset residents will collect the requisite 200 signatures to force a special town meeting on the issue. Selectmen have to call a special town meeting within 45 days once the signatures are re-

Deer Hill principal seeks the top spot

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Deer Hill School principal Paul Callahan has applied for a new job as the Cohasset school superintendent. He was among 42 candidates who got their applications in before the April 17 deadline. Callahan was the only "insider" to go after the $90,000-$105,000 post which will be empty this summer. The current schools superintendent Stephen Hart is retiring. He will step down in August.

Callahan confirmed Wednesday he is seeking the top school post but did not want to make a statement. But school board Chairman Rick Shea said he is pleased to see the quality and the number of people in the pool of candidates. He said the board expected only about 30 or 35 applications based on a prediction from the search committee's consultant. Shea also said most of

Gillette executive buys the Kennedy house

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

An executive vice-president at the Gillette Company has reportedly signed an agreement to buy the late Michael Kennedy's house at 181 Atlantic Ave. Robert G. King of 17 Common Street in Scituate is out of town and did not return calls to the Mariner. But a source close to the Kennedy family confirmed the closing is expected by the end of May. The source did not comment on the selling price. Kennedy's house was listed for $2.3 million.

The report ends speculation the house was to be sold to movie star and Kennedy relative by marriage Arnold Schwarzenegger. Kennedy was the first cousin of Schwarzenegger's wife Maria Shriver, TV journalist and daughter of Eunice Kennedy Shriver. Earlier this month, rumors the new owner was a Scituate executive surfaced. He was believed to be a top executive at Gillette.

King is the executive vice-president for the North Atlantic group, according to company spokesman Eric Kraus. He is a Massachusetts native and a long time resident of the South Shore but has also lived in Mexico and in South America. King's house in Scituate has recently been put on the market. COHASSET'S WEEK

Mariner article criticized

Selectman Merle Brown publicly criticized the Cohasset Mariner for a story last week about three selectmen turning up at the school committee meeting. Brown said article created controversy where none existed and said the Mariner should apologize.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said it was a coincidence that three selectmen, who constitute a quorum, appeared at the school committee meeting. Town Manager Mark Haddad was also there to discuss the teacher contracts.

Selectman Nan Roth suggested selectmen get a definitive ruling on whether they have to separately post a selectmen's meeting when they attend the meeting of another board.

"We need to understand once and for all whether a quorum can attend a meeting of another board," she said.

Aerial photos obtained

Town Manager Mark Haddad pointed out two aerial photos of Cohasset hanging in the selectmen's office to the board Monday night. The photos are a gift from the Army Corps of Engineers, Haddad said. He explained the Army Corps discovered the photographs after its recent move from Waltham to Concord and gave them to the town.

Selectmen said they were a nice addition to the office.

Callahan steps down from ConCom

Newly elected Selectman Tom Callahan has officially stepped down from the conservation commission, selectmen said this week.

School project on schedule

Rob Spoffard of the school building committee told selectmen this week that the new school should open on schedule.

"But if we can't (open on time in September), we would open school in Osgood and go from there," he said.

Spoffard said the roof is on the school, the studs are in and the walls are going up.

He said teachers have walked through the building.

"It's impressive, it really is," Spoffard said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she chaperoned a group of sixth-graders who were doing a project on electricity and walked through the building and found it very light inside with great windows.

School playground proposal

The school project will cover site work for the school playground but money for a playground structure will be raised privately.

Adrianne McCarthy of the school building committee said fund-raising will be conducted soon to raise money for a new play park which can be built in phases. She said the first phase will cost about $12,000 out of a total of about $43,000 for the three phases. Volunteers would have to assemble the playground, she said.

New skin for storage shed

The frame of old Hagerty cutting room is now up by the new DPW garage on Cedar Street. Town Manager Mark Haddad said $7,500 of the $11,000 not expended in the snow plowing account last winter can be used to put a "new skin" on the structure which will match the siding of the DPW garage. The building will be used to store plows and sander bodies.

It could also possibly be used to store the components for the north Cohasset sewer project, he said. (See related story, page one).

Lamberts Lane school bus service

Selectmen are waiting to hear from the school committee if the school department will provide school bus service on Lamberts Lane.

If service is provided, selectmen want to know if a mini-bus or regular school bus will be used. That would dictate the size of turnaround needed, selectmen said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a Lamberts Lane resident offered to do the work to provide a turnaround. He said talks with president of the Cohasset Country Club about using club property as a turnaround are going well.

What makes our bagels the best?
We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches
We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

We do party platters and catering

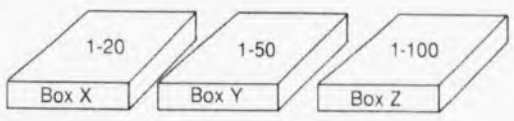
The Cohasset Review

A humorous guide to the MCAS testing



The state tests start next week for fourth, eighth and tenth graders. Since the advance word on them has been so gloomy, Mariner reporter Margo Sullivan decided it might be a good time for a little humor. In the absence of a better-known review to help crack the tests, we offer this whimsical guide based on sample questions for fourth-graders. (OK, the eighth grade test looked too tough for the reporter.)

Please do note the comments are based on sample questions only, and since the answers were not provided, your guess is as good as ours. (Maybe better.)

Question 1. The tiles in the boxes.
Box X has 20 tiles numbered 1 to 20.
Box Y has 50 tiles numbered 1 to 50.
Box Z has 100 tiles numbered 1 to 100.

Mark is going to choose a numbered tile from one of the boxes without looking into the box. From which box would he have the BEST chance of choosing a tile numbered 15?

A) Box X
B) Box Y
C) Box Z
D) It doesn't matter which box.

Mariner Reporter's Answer: Mark's big mistake in our opinion is trying to pick tile number 15 without looking into the boxes. Pawing at it blind means he's got a fat chance of pulling the number 15 tile in any of the boxes. But remember, this question asks about his BEST chance. Given the limits of the experiment, we'd go with Box X. Since it has the fewest tiles of the three boxes and it does have a number 15 inside, it will be his BEST shot. Our answer is a) Box X.

For whiz kids who have already learned probability theory, our BEST guess says he has a 1 in 20 shot of coming up with tile 15 in Box X but only a 1 in 50 shot of grabbing number 15 in Box Y. Worse, he'd be looking at 1 in 100 odds of scarfing number 15 out of Box Z.

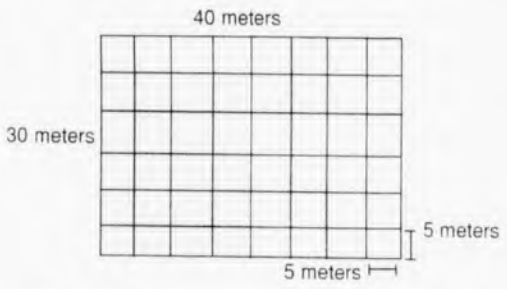
How we solved it.

Step 1. We looked at the question type first.

According to Ruth Fennessey, the curriculum director at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools, the test has three types of questions:

- Type 1 = Multiple-choice;
- Type 2 = Short questions;
- Type 3 = Open-response questions

This question was a multiple-choice. They count for 50 percent of the score which sounds like a lot to us. So nailing down as many of these can only help. But some of the short open-response types look like the multiple-choice as we'll see later. The two types are not mixed in the same section of the test, according to Rick Atkins, an education specialist at the state Department of Education. Still, it's important to start each question fresh and take a minute to make sure you know what you're doing. Don't get distracted.



Step 2. We drew a picture or a map to help understand the question.

Some students think drawing maps and sketches is a crutch. But you don't get extra credit for getting the answer right without drawing. So you might as well indulge even when there are already pictures on the test. In this case, the test shows pictures of three boxes alongside this question, but there is still an opportunity here to draw something. For starters, exactly what are these tiles and how did they get numbers on them. We racked our brains and figured the tile is probably something like a Scrabble game tile, except these tiles have numbers instead of letters. So we drew one and made sure we knew what the question is talking about.

Step 3. We took our sweet time.

Once again, there's no extra credit for making short work of the test. Going slowly and checking your answers will pay off in a better test score.

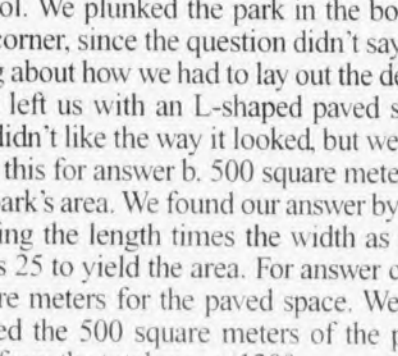
Question 2. The city is building a small park downtown. The park is 40 meters long and 30 meters wide.

There will be a rectangular garden in the park 25 meters long by 20 meters wide. The rest of the park will be paved.

A) Decide where to put the garden area. Shade the garden area on the park grid shown above.

B) What is the area of the garden space in the park? Explain or show how you found your answer.

C) What is the area of the paved space in the park? Explain or show how you found your answer.



Mariner Reporter's Answer: Writing news stories is beginning to look easy compared to this test. Double-Whew! METERS????. We didn't learn the metric system when the Mariner reporter was in school. We plunked the park in the bottom-left corner, since the question didn't say anything about how we had to lay out the design. That left us with an L-shaped paved space. We didn't like the way it looked, but we went with this for answer b. 500 square meters for the park's area. We found our answer by multiplying the length times the width as in 20 times 25 to yield the area. For answer c. 700 square meters for the paved space. We subtracted the 500 square meters of the park's area from the total space (1200 square meters or 40 times 30.)

How we solved it.

Step 1. We looked at the question type first. (Yup, same thing as before.)

This was a type 2 question that looked like a multiple-choice. It was also a double-whammy type 2 because this one asked us for Both the answer and an explanation of how we arrived at the answer.

Step 2. We drew a picture or a map to help understand the question. (Yup, same thing as before.)

They had a drawing already. But once again, we did an extra drawing to help us try out our answer.

Step 3. We took our sweet time. (Yup, same thing as before.)

Once again, there's no extra credit for making short work of the test. Going slowly and checking your answers will pay off in a better test score. We checked our answer by figuring the areas separately and comparing them to the total. Since the whole space was 40 by 30, the total area of the park plus the paved space had to equal 1,200 square meters. It couldn't be bigger. It also couldn't be smaller. To get the L-shaped area, the Mariner reporter, kind of a dum-dum in math, split the section in two strips. One was five meters long by 40 meters wide and came to 200 square meters in area. The other piece was 20 meters long by 25 square. Its area measured 500 square meters. (Wow, same as the park.) Then we added 500 + 200 and got 700 square meters. This was the same answer we got when we subtracted the park's 500 square meters from the total 1,200 square meters. (Talk about going around in a circle.)

Step 4. About the meters thing.

We usually deal with feet and not meters. But the question said meters. The Mariner reporter dealt with this irritation by pretending the question asked for the area in feet. Since all the sides were given in meters and it wasn't necessary to transfer some of them into feet or inches, we just used what we knew about measuring area (which isn't much) and did the best we could. The only catch is we had to remember to write meters, not feet, when we put the answer down.

Question 3. Corey worked these problems.

2+8 = 10	6+6 = 12	10+4 = 14
12+2 = 14	8+4 =12	2 +6 =8

When Corey finished, he said:

"I think the sum of ANY two numbers is always an even number."

A) Is Corey correct? Explain the reason for your answer using pictures, numbers, or words.

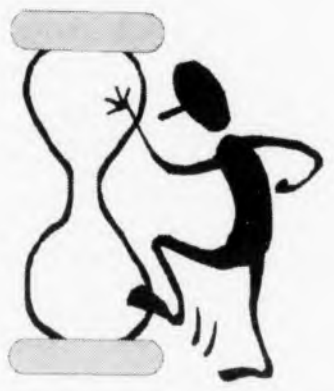
Maya looked at Corey's work. She thought a bit and said:

"I think the sum of any two ODD numbers is always an odd number."

B) Is Maya correct? Explain the reason for your answer using pictures, numbers, or words.

Mariner Reporter's Answer: At last! A question that was easy for the Mariner reporter who has found in Corey and Maya two kindred spirits just as silly in math as she. Our answer is: Corey is wrong. We added 1 + 2 and got 3 which is an odd number. Maya is wrong. We added 1 + 1 and got an even number 2.

How we solved it.



Step 1. We looked at the question type first. (Yup, same thing as before.)

This was another type 2 question that looked like a multiple-choice. Unlike the first type 2 question we saw, this one asked us for Both the answer and an explanation of how we arrived at the answer. It was also a 2-part question. After we dispatched Corey, we had to deal with Maya.

Step 2. We drew a picture to help understand the question. (Yup, same thing as before.)

We just added up some different numbers.

Step 3. We took our sweet time. (Yup, same thing as before.)

Once again, there's no extra credit for making short work of the test. Going slowly and checking your answers will pay off in a better test score. Starting with Corey, true, all the numbers he added up were even numbers, and their sums were even numbers. But then he forgot about odd numbers and went too far by saying the sum of ANY two numbers would be an even number. We added up two odd numbers 1 + 1 and got another even number 2 for their sum. Corey was still looking good at that point. But we didn't stop there. We picked one odd and one even number to add up to show he was wrong.

Once we solved Corey's part of the problem, we really also had the answer to Maya's part. One thing we didn't do is go overboard. The sum of any two odd numbers is always an even number. Maybe we should have put that rule down for extra credit. But we at the Mariner play it safe.

We did call the state Department of Education to ask whether we would lose points for not going all out with the answer. According to Atkins, we detected a problem that exists on a lot of sample questions but will not happen on the real test. Atkins said each of the open-ended questions is graded on a scale from 1 to 4 according to a "scoring rubric." The sample test questions are really the ones that were flawed so the educators could not come up with a solid way to score the answer. On the real test, students will not have to guess about how complete their answers should be, Atkins said. The scoring is explained on the test.

Step 4. We ignored the specifics about the children in the question.

My first name is not Corey or Maya. So it is pretty easy for me to say the Corey and Maya on the test made mistakes. I also don't have any friends named Corey or Maya. I can't even think of somebody I don't like by those names. This turns out to be good. This means I can be totally objective and just answer the test question. But if my name happened to be Corey, I might be unhappy to say he was not correct. So, if a name on the test is the same as my own name or someone I know, I just cross it out and pretend the test says Mr. Smith. Just remember to put the right name back when you write in your answer.

Finally, good luck on the test. If you get a good score, our hats are off to you. If not, you can always be a reporter. It's really fun.

Special town meeting on sewer in pipeline

ceived and authorized by the town clerk.

In a telephone interview last Saturday before he left on vacation. Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said the people of north Cohasset should get another chance to decide how to approach the project.

"We owe it to the people of north Cohasset," he said. "We feel the people who are going to be serviced should decide how it's going to be handled."

The controversial and complicated sewer project took on another twist this week after Guild said Town Manager Mark Haddad did not have the authority to terminate a portion on the contract. (While the notice of award had been given, the actual contract was not issued and signed. However, the town will have to pay the contractor about $9,000 to get out of the contract).

Guild said he conferred with a friend who is a former town counsel and reviewed the warrant articles authorizing the project and article establishing the town manager form of government and determined that the sewer commission has the sole authority to bid and issue the contracts.

He said the sewer commission is an independently elected board. The only say selectmen have is in the nature of the bond issue, which means how the money is borrowed by the treasurer, Guild explained.

But Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said while sewer commissioners had had that authority, it is clear the Town Manager Act, enacted last year, invests that power in the town manager.

Selectmen then reaffirmed to Haddad Monday that he should terminate what is known as Contract 2.

Reached by telephone Tuesday, sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil said the sewer commission did not agree with town counsel's view on who has the authority to issue and terminate contracts. He said the sewer commission would let the contractor know the contract is not terminated.

"We are not convinced they can terminate the contract," Vanderweil said. "They can write a letter to attempt to terminate it but I'm not sure the contractor will accept it.

"We will write our own letter accepting the contract."

Vanderweil stressed that Contract 2 had to be "kept alive" in order to let a special town meeting ultimately decide how financing the sewer project should be handled.

"We want the people of north Cohasset and the town to decide with full information before them," Vanderweil said.

He said if selectmen elect not to call a special town meeting and not enough citizens sign a petition to call one, then the sewer commission would terminate Contract 2 and would proceed with the option of buying the components.

The project, which was bid twice, ended up coming in $2.7 million over estimates. This was despite being divided into four contracts to attract smaller contractors and therefore, more bidders. Due to the cost, contracts 2, 3 and 4, which would hook up the individual homes in north Cohasset to the sewer main are on hold. However, Contract 1, which will lay the main in the streets, has been issued and will go forward, Haddad said.

(Town meeting in 1997 appropriated $6.6 million for the project contingent on a Proposition 2 1/2 override to spread half the cost or $3.3 million among all taxpayers with the balance being picked up by the users. The override subsequently passed at the ballot box).

With a vote of 141-103 in favor, the request to appropriate the additional money to fund the overage failed to obtain the two-thirds majority (161 votes) required at the March 28 town meeting. A two-thirds vote was necessary because the town would have had to borrow the money which would be paid back entirely through betterments assessed to the homeowner.

Over objections from the sewer commission, selectmen voted April 13 to terminate Contract 2, which would have hooked up the homes around the environmentally sensitive Straits Pond to the sewer main. Contracts 3 and 4 would connect the remaining homes in north Cohasset to the sewer main which runs to the treatment plant in Hull.

At their April 13 meeting, selectmen said they planned to either rebid contracts 2, 3 and 4 as a unit or use the remaining $1.4 million of the $6.6 million initially appropriated for the entire north Cohasset project to buy the components (valves, tanks and grinder pumps) for the hookups. Then the town would turn over the equipment to each homeowner's private contractor for installation. This option, which is backed by CEES, would only be considered if the state agreed to allow the highly favorable financing promised for the complete connections on just the equipment instead, selectmen said.

Harborfest celebrates Osgood, parts way with Art Festival

By Lisa Campenella
CORRESPONDENT

There seems to be an unofficial theme running through this year's Harforfest celebration slated for the weekend of June 5-7.

For the first time in several years, the Harborfest will be held without the cooperation of the South Shore Arts Center. Also, during the festival, hopefully hundreds of alumni of the nearly closed Joseph Osgood Elementary School will gather to celebrate the 70th birthday of the school as well as its imminent closing.

Seemingly this year's Harborfest is about saying goodbye to some old friends while making new ones.

The separation from the South Shore Arts Center's annual Arts Festival is an amicable one, according to one Harborfest organizer Jim Laggrotteria.

"We always envisioned Harborfest as a town celebration," Lagrotteria said. "A place to go and meet your neighbor."

Although the union with the Arts Festival was a successful one, drawing thousands of people to the event, Lagrotteria said the huge festival began to draw away from the Harborfest's "principles" of being a hometown gathering run by Cohasset residents for Cohasset residents.

"It was nothing against the S.S. Arts Center," Lagrotteria said. "It was against our principles in a sense to bring in all those vendors."

The Arts Festival, he said, is the Arts CenterÕs major fundraiser drawing a lot of fair goers and vendors but the original intention of the Harforfest began to erode. He said he appreciates all the support the Arts Center has given and wishes it success for the Arts Festival, slated for later in June.

With the absence of the Arts Festival, Lagrotteria said he is unsure of how large the turnout will be but believes the town will come out in droves to support the event. One attraction that has the potential to bring nearly everyone in town to the Harborfest is the celebration commemorating 70 years of the Osgood School and its eventual closing.

Rose Collins, one of the members of the Osgood Birthday Celebration Committee, said the school's commemoration has "mushroomed" from being a school event into a town-wide celebration of the beloved school.

On the second day of the Harborfest, following the Rotary Club's pancake breakfast with proceeds going to the new teen center, several tents will house a history of the Osgood school. Particulars include a wall of photographs from alumni of the Osgood School, a wall of art work from students of all ages, a "Family Tree" of generations of Cohasset families attending the school and organizers hope hundreds of Osgood alumni going back to the first years of the school.

> "We always envisioned Harborfest as a town celebration, a place to go and meet your neighbor."
> JIM LAGROTTERIA, HARBORFEST ORGANIZER

"It's very exciting," Collins said. She said several teachers and students from the school's early days will be there and she encourages anyone who has attended the school to come to the tent and share their memories of happy days at the Osgood.

"I love the Osgood," Collins sincerely said, expressing the commonly held view of the elementary school: "It's such a warm and wonderful place."

Collins encourages anyone who has generations of family who attended the school to contact her at the school or at home (383-0760) to be part of the OsgoodÕs Family Tree. Although her opinion may be biased, she has been a second grade teacher at the school for nearly 20 years, Collins said the school is one of the most loved institutions in town. Even though a new Osgood school is being built behind the Deer Hill Elementary School, Collins said the qualities and attributes that have made the Osgood what it is will be brought to the new school.

"People tell me, 'oh Rose the Osgood's closing...but the positive happy feelings, the love, will go to the new school.' "

Aside from the Osgood event, the Harborfest has included many of the town's organizations including the Rotary Club, the American Legion, the Council on Aging and nearly every age group of student in town.

One of the most popular events, the baseball/softball fast pitch contest will again run through the event.

Also, there will be music all weekend long at the center stage on the common boasting local amateur bands and paid professionals performing a broad range of styles including rock 'n' roll, Big Band and Jazz.

"We try to tickle everyone's fancy," Lagrotteria said.

Friday night's highlight is the "Illuminaria" when townspeople light candles around the pond and sing hymns. "It's beautiful," Lagrotteria said.

Sunday's events do not begin until about 1:30 p.m. when the Blessing of the Fleet takes place. The blessing is performed by a representative of all the clergy in town accompanied by the sounds of a marching band and is followed by what Lagrotteria calls a "Norman Rockwell" town parade.

"There are fire trucks, police cars, floats, horses and people pushing their children in carriages," he said. "It's your typical hometown parade."

Events begin Friday, June 5, about 3 p.m. and rap up Sunday about dusk offering plenty of food, entertainment and wares for sale by local businesses. In it's 8th year, the Harborfest is sure to have something for everyone.

"Just come, it's a great time," Lagrotteria said. "You'll wish you hadn't missed the last seven years."

Town waits for advice on dump shutdown

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Town officials are awaiting a decision from Town Counsel Paul DeRensis advising them whether to enforce a shut-down order by Building Inspector Robert Egan ordering the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to close down permanently. As of late Tuesday evening, Egan was still awaiting a ruling from town counsel advising him on how to proceed. Town Manager Mark Haddad confirmed that town counsel was still investigating all possibilities.

Earlier this month, the zoning board of appeals (ZBA) upheld an order by Egan ordering the landfill to shut down permanently because of a permit violation. John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group, SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), expected CHL to defy the shut down order and said the town could then seek a court order forcing the owners of the landfill to comply. CHL has remained open even after the ZBA upheld the shut down order.

Last week, CHL filed a lawsuit asking the Land Court to overturn Building Inspector Robert Egan's decision. The lawsuit has delayed action by the town while Town Counsel Paul DeRensis considers the effects of the lawsuit on the town's shut down order.

Last week, CHL filed a lawsuit asking the Land Court to overturn Egan's decision. The lawsuit has delayed action by the town while DeRensis considers the effects of the lawsuit on the town's shut down order.

McNabb said the landfill should be forced to stay closed during the lawsuit, but attorneys for CHL said it should remain open. The courts will make the final decision.

"My sense is the town will take some action," McNabb said. "Whether that's an injunction or criminal action, I don't know. Town counsel could decide to do nothing, but I doubt it."

McNabb has also submitted a request to Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe asking her to shut down the landfill because he believes it is at its maximum allowable height of 190-feet. McNabb said he has not measured the landfill, but the last height reading was 178-feet last M[illegible]. According to McNabb, rep[illegible]s by CHL detailing how much material it has accepted since last May prove the landfill has to be well over its maximum height to have legally placed so much new material in the facility.

However, the health board discovered last month that CHL had placed as much as 100,000 tons of material on the slopes of the landfill in violation of DEP regulations. DEP regulates the angle of the slope of the sides of the landfill to ensure that the material stays in place. McNabb said overfilling the slopes creates the danger of a landslide because the angle becomes too steep. Overfilling the landfill could also potentially ruptur[illegible] its liner, allowing hazardo[illegible] material to leak out of the facility.

Egan has also ordered CHL to remove 7,800 square feet of material it placed in a section of the facility not authorized for landfilling.

CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said the owners of the landfill are trying to work with environmental authorities regarding the extra material in the landfill.

"We are continuing to attempt to mediate the question of the overfill through DEP and the state Office of Dispute Resolution," Moehrke said. "The town, and SAFE and anyone with an interest in this is invited to participate in that process."

Moehrke added that although a number of recent decisions had gone against CHL, the owners of the landfill would continue to exercise their legal right to appeal.

McNabb discovered the overfill last November when he found 7,800 square feet of material in a section of the landfill not approved for dumping. The permit violation was discovered by McNabb in January when he found that CHL had never filed its special permit to operate a landfill in Cohasset with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. State law requires permits to be filed with the registry before becoming effective. Egan shut down CHL permanently on a technicality related to not filing the permit.

Part of the landfill sits in the town's Water Resource District, created in 1988. Landfills are prohibited from the district except for facilities that were in legal operation before the creation of the district. Egan ruled that CHL's failure to file the permit meant it wasn't in lawful operation prior to the creation of the water district and could not claim special pre-existing use status. The zoning board upheld Egan's decision, technically shutting down the landfill for good.

HATS OFF TO THE LAGROTTERIAS!

The Lagrotteria family has done it again, folks! They have embarked on another successful venture! Have you been in to see it yet? Aren't all of the shoes just the best! What are we talking about? Why, the Shoe Market, of course. Mom and Dad (Jim and Dottie) along with Mary, Greg, Jennifer, Ann-Marie and John (think that's involved in the store, but we could have left out a few!) have all gotten together to create this wonderful source for the latest in every imaginable shoe style! Everyone in town has known a "Lag" — Dad Jim is a pillar of the church, all of their children went through the Cohasset school system (and made great names for themselves) — we could go on and on! The point is, you will be greeted with a friendly smile, a knowledgeable "Lagrotteria to help you," and lots of styles to choose from! Oh, it is located in Stop and Shop Plaza (in the old Johnny Appleseeds Store); hours are Monday to Wednesday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Thursday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.; and Sunday, noon to 5 p.m. You will love it!

THE CUTEST OF ALL

Isn't she just the cutest?! Her name is Mikayla Kathleen Sullivan, born March 25 at 9:56 a.m., and she weighed 7 pounds 2 oz. Mikayla joins her big sister, Megan Alise, who is delighted to have a baby sister to play with! Mom and Dad are Kathleen (Stanford) Sullivan and Frank Sullivan; Mikayla's maternal grandparents are Florence and Joseph Stanford, her paternal grandmother is Mary Sullivan of Braintree. Now that the weather is nice, watch for Florence Stanford pushing her brand-new granddaughter around town, we can't wait!

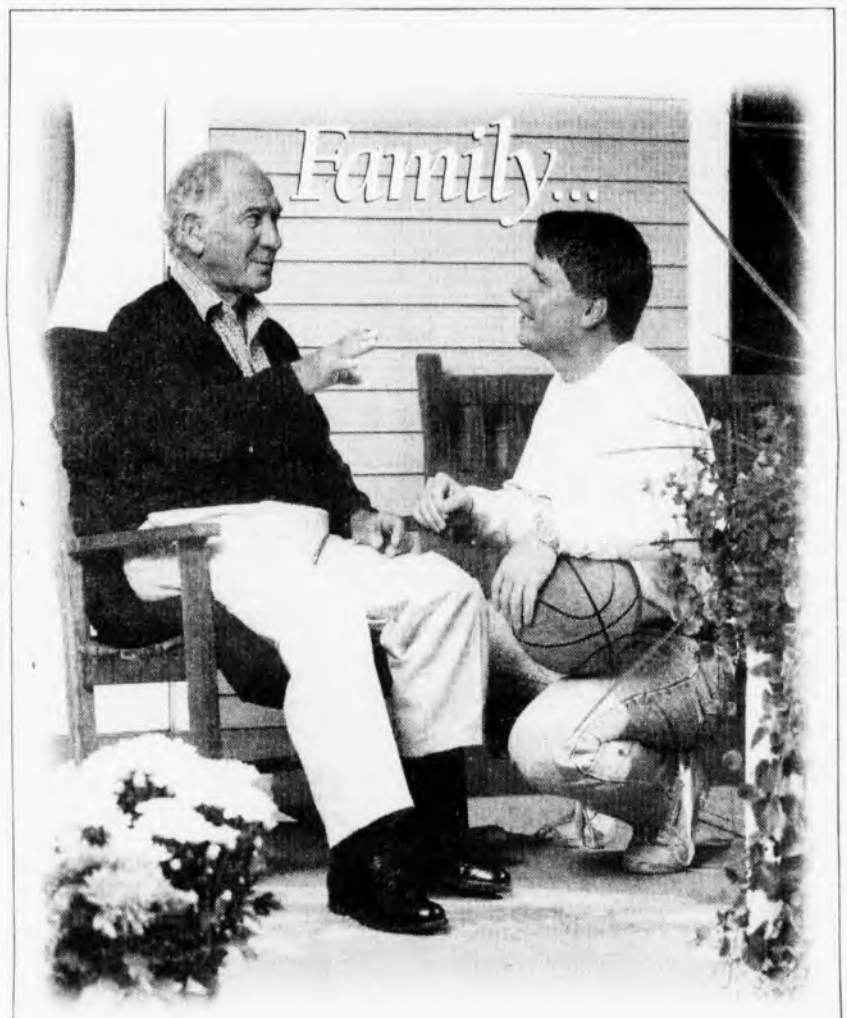
Mikayla Kathleen Sullivan has arrived!

LITTLE LEAGUE OPENING DAY

A busy month is fast approaching, so get out your pencils and circle the following: May 2, it's the official opening of Little League — there will be a parade, followed by the opening ceremonies (it was started in 1952, so many of the people who started the whole thing will be there as part of the festivities — there will also be the presentation of the Leo Fiori Exxon plaque to a man who has been instrumental to the program through the years, as well as being devoted to children and youth of the town. The parade starts downtown, and arrives at the field at 9 a.m. Lots of people whom you haven't seen in some time will be there, as well as all of the "moms and pops" who have made the field and program what it is today (awesome), so plan on being there.

TRACK DEDICATION MAY 7

On May 7, at alumni field, there will be the track dedication. As you have read, it will be dedicated to an former teacher and friend to all; Charles Davis. His children are flying in from everywhere for the event, as are former friends and fellow teachers and friends. The festivities will begin at 3:30 p.m.; after the dedication will be a reception in the CHS cafeteria, complete with refreshments. One note — Charlie would be so proud! How he loved his students, co-workers, friends and CHS!



And, as the former track coach, he would have been ever-so-proud of the new field and track!

DON'T MISS 'CONGO CAPERS'

On Friday and Saturday, May 8 and 9, "Congo Capers" will be presented. It will be at the CHS auditorium, at 8 p.m., and will cost $7 per seat. This year will mark the third production of "Congo Capers," since it first hit the stage in 1993. In addition to presenting an evening of fun family entertainment, the show was originally created by Second Congregational Church members to help bring the people together and develop new friendships among parishioners. Cast members span several generations from the youngest in their early 20s to the more veteran performers in their 80s. According to director/choreographer Joanne Fitchner, "The whole group really clicks and has a lot of fun. Our audience will find the humor and merriment contagious. We want to give people something to remember, and talk about, until next time." Tickets are going fast, get yours today!

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Fairness for north Cohasset

To those of us who dream about a simpler time with easier solutions — the north Cohasset sewer project is our worst nightmare.

It has all the makings of a good novel including a power struggle, strong-willed characters, conspiracy theorists and militant citizens but with a plot so complicated that no publisher would ever consider it.

But buried amid all the controversy, finger-pointing, information and misinformation is a project that desperately needs to be done. It is undeniable that providing sewer service for the vast majority of homes in north Cohasset is the best way to clean up the environment and maintain property values in that part of town.

So what's the problem?

The project to sewer the 277 homes was approved and paid for last year. However, the plan went awry when the bids started coming in. The first bid round was tossed out. The second group was substantially less but still 40 percent over estimates.

Ever since the sewer commissioners started talking about needing $2.7 million more to complete the project, some said the town is being gauged by greedy contractors and others accused the sewer commission of gross incompetence.

There's no question that town meeting last month was confused.

For openers, voters had to understand the difference between 50/50 state equivalency grant financing and 50/50 town/user shared funding. That, coupled with a barrage of conflicting information from a concerned citizens group and the sewer commission, helped further cloud the issue.

So it's no wonder that Article 18 failed even though all it would have done was to appropriate the money to be paid back entirely by users through betterments assessed over 20 years. Article 18 would have also allowed the homeowners to take advantage of highly favorable state financing.

(It's important to point out that Article 18 received a favorable 141-103 vote but not the 161 votes or 2/3 majority required because it was a borrowing article).

Since town meeting, another proposal has surfaced. Under this scenario the town would spend the remaining money in the initial appropriation to buy the grinder pumps, tanks and valves needed to complete the connections from the sewer main to each user's house. The town would then stockpile the equipment and turn it over to the homeowner's private contractor for installation.

In light of the latest option under consideration, we think a special town meeting is the only fair way to allow the town and especially those residents in north Cohasset to fully air this issue.

Is the components-only option feasible? If it is, does it open a whole new set of headaches for the homeowner and the town which would maintain the inventory?

Also at a special town meeting, the north Cohasset sewer project would not have to compete with dozens of other items of business ranging from water tank proposals to the acceptance of private ways.

We have another suggestion. If other towns' projects and sewer contractors are going to be used as examples to bolster arguments, let's ask their representatives to appear in person to explain. The numbers — especially those being tossed around for the Hingham project — are being manipulated by both sides of the sewer issue to support their arguments.

The Hingham Journal is one of our sister newspapers and we can assure you the Weir River sewer project in Hingham is every bit as complicated as Cohasset's. And like their Cohasset counterparts near Straits Pond, homes with failing septic systems in the Weir River Watershed have been causing pollution.

The sewering of these districts will put an end to that environmental problem.

Report read with dismay

To the Editor:

I read, with interest and dismay, the April 23 Mariner report by David Tibbetts about my old neighborhood. I grew up in Cohasset and lived on Sheldon Road beside Stephen and Vivian Bobo for nearly a quarter of a century. Their children grew up next to ours. We shared a property line marked only by a small bush and a flower bed. Not once in all those years did we have an argument. During that time, Steve designed and built a boat there, without incident, that was successfully launched with neighborhood help, and sailed by Steve for some years.

I wish, for the sake of the whole neighborhood, that everyone could share the respect for the honesty and integrity of the Bobo family that my family learned living next door.

In defense of midges

Everything Margo Sullivan had to say about the midges on Straits Pond is true. Still, I feel oddly compelled to come, well, if not to their defense, at least then to a place of advocacy for their, albeit temporary, existence. Personally, I hate vacuuming midges off the ceiling, which is what happens if I neglect to shut the door behind me quickly enough on a summer evening. Yet these midges are so ... so ... so nondescript. By comparison, the buzzing of mosquitoes is enough to strike terror in warmbloods; even in their repugnance mosquitoes at least can titillate, not unlike a B-grade slasher movie. Midges, though, have a banality about them. They don't buzz. They don't bite. They just swarm. And left unvacuumed, they will by morning have fallen unceremoniously, quite dead to the floor below.

However, there is one redeeming feature to these swarming yawns. Not only do they provide food for spiders, as reported by Ms. Sullivan, but they also serve as a staple, and as an apparent source of entertainment, for the swallows inhabiting the pondside. Each year I take great delight in watching the swallows swooping and swishing joyfully through their mid-flight feasts. If birds can be said to display pleasure in repast these swallows are aviary gourmets. And they do seem to enjoy the hunt ... not content merely to fly through a midge cloud with their beaks wide open, Straits Pond swallows are true aerialists, displaying all the panache of Tom Cruise in Top Gun.

I can't say that I'll miss the midges once the Straits Pond cleanup has had its full effect. But I know that I'll miss the endless hours of entertainment provided by the predator swallows, and I do indeed wonder what impact the extinction of local midges will have on swallows as the next tier in the food chain (not that I'll miss the spiders either).

Living with a septic and drainage nightmare

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

David and Frances Burnham love their home in the Newtonville section of Cohasset. They love everything about their property except for the 30-feet-in-diameter puddle of raw sewage rotting on their lawn, and the torrent of water that rushes through their property after every rain storm. The Burnham's are living with a public health emergency that is so severe, it would sicken most people.

The board of health has declared the Burnham's property and three adjacent properties public health hazards because of the exposed sewage. The board of health has ordered the Burnhams and the other three homeowners to shift their wastewater systems from septic to tight tanks, sealed septic tanks, until they are connected to the sewer. The health board is scheduled to discuss the implementation of the tight tanks at the four homes at a meeting tonight in town hall.

Problems with bad septic systems, raw sewage and poor drainage are not new issues for homeowners in Newtonville. The Burnham's have been living with the problem for many years, but the problem has become intolerable in recent days. Most of the flooding and sewage on the Burnham's property is coming from other people's property because the Burnham's live near the bottom of a bowl-shaped landscape. The problem is also dangerous to the health and safety of the public. The Burnham's are upset that the town will not help them fix a problem that is a public health hazard which is not their fault, but a factor of the landscape and outside factors. She added that most people don't realize how hazardous the situation is.

"Everyone is poorly informed, and people don't understand just what a public health emergency is," she said. "The town closes the beaches when the fecal coliform (excrement) count reaches 230 parts per million (ppm), but in 1995 the count on our property was 20,000 ppm, and just last January it was 6,400 ppm."

The ground underneath the four homes is rocky ledge that is poorly suited for the septic systems and old cesspools the current homeowners are using. The Burnhams installed a new septic system years ago, but it failed after only four years. Other man-made problems contributed to the sewage problems. Frances Burnham said she discovered an eight-inch sewer pipe extending 15 feet under her property from a neighbor's property. The pipe was removed, but soil has become gray and useless.

And the problems with drainage are just as severe. The Burnham's property is located on top of a groundwater confluence that causes geysers of water to erupt through their lawn after rain or when water levels are extremely high. The Burnhams say the poor drainage is eroding the foundation of their home.

The Burnham's received some relief for their septic problems from town meeting. While the Burnham's are scheduled to be connected to the expanded central Cohasset sewer plant, that event is at least one year from completion.

The situation is so bad that the health board has ordered the sewer commission to connect the homes to the sewer system within 30 days or face a lawsuit. The sewer commission has rejected the health board's order. Town Manager Mark Haddad has obtained a ruling from Town Counsel Paul DeRensis stating that the health board does not have the authority to order the sewer commission to sewer the four homes within 30 days.

The Burnham's asked selectmen for help paying for expensive drainage improvements to their property to slow the erosion of their foundation and create a more livable situation. A lawyer for the Burnham's, Robert A. Fasanella, presented their case to selectmen on April 27.

"The Burnhams, whose residence is located at the bottom of a ravine created by the surrounding hills, have suffered extreme flooding problems, which have been exacerbated by the flow of raw sewage onto their property from nearby, failing septic systems," Fasanella wrote in a letter to selectmen dated March 25.

Fasanella pointed out that the Burnham's experience the kind of flooding on their property during average rain storms that is usually restricted to the kind of damage produced by 100-year-storms. Fasanella showed selectmen photos of the Burnham's front yard completely submerged under water after rain storm in February.

"The enclosed photos do not represent a recent flooding problem, but rather a graphic portrait of the long-standing, chronic flooding problems which affect the entire Newtonville neighborhood and inner Cohasset Harbor area," Fasanella said. "The serious nature of the flooding poses a danger for vehicular travel as well as a danger for the transmittal of raw sewage and fecal viruses from failing septic systems in the neighborhood."

Despite their pleas for public assistance, selectmen declined to help the Burnham's pay for their drainage problems because their home is on a private way. The Burnham's had proposed two schemes: one would have alleviated flooding for five homes at a cost of $35,000 by placing three new catch basins on Newtonville Street to direct water into a wetland adjacent to Atlantic Ave. The second plan would have alleviated flooding on all of Newtonville Road by constructing five catch basin and connecting into an existing drainage system on Atlantic Ave. at a cost of $70,000.

The Burnham's told selectmen they had tried to do as much as they could on their own, even enlisting the aid of neighbors. The Burnham's had asked selectmen to split the repair cost with homeowners on Newtonville Road.

"Neighbors have refused to cooperate and in fact have built things to direct water toward our property," Frances Burnham told selectmen, referring to an abutter who built a berm that has worsened flooding on her property.

But DeRensis advised selectmen against helping the Burnham's because they live on a private way. DeRensis said paying for drainage improvements on a private way would set a precedent for other private streets in the future.

Fasanella disagreed, saying the Burnham's property was too severe to serve as a precedent for other private ways.

DeRensis also advised selectmen to avoid the proposal because the drainage project is too expensive.

"The budget is extremely tight," said selectman Nan Roth.

Selectmen did say that residents on Newtonville Road can connect into the Atlantic Ave. drainage system at their own cost.

Frances Burnham let out a frustrated laugh during a telephone interview as she tried to cope with uncooperative abutters and a town that refused to get involved in solving a public health emergency.

"This is a community project," she said. "It's beyond us."

David Burnham questioned the selectmen's reluctance to help out with the problem.

"This is what community government is supposed to be all about," he said.

Health board considers tight tanks for Newtonville

The health board has ordered four homes on Newtonville Road — numbers 26, 26A, 30, and 36 — to go onto tight tanks to alleviate health problems from failed septic systems. Tight tanks are sealed containers for sewage wastewater that are used in place of failed septic systems. The health board is requiring the four homes to go onto tight tanks because raw sewage is percolating up through the ground because of failed septic systems.

But tight tanks are only a temporary solution to the problem in Newtonville. The sewer department plans to connect the four homes to the central Cohasset sewer project, but those connections will take at least one year. In the meantime, the health board feels the health problem is so severe that the four homes have to be placed on tight tanks. The health board plans to discuss the Newtonville situation at its meeting tonight in town hall.

There are still problems with tight tanks. The units, which can be underground or above, must have a minimum capacity of 2,000 gallons said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. But an average family of four can produce 150 gallons of sewage in a single day. The tank must be pumped before it is full, which can be quite expensive considering how fast the tank fills up.

The state Department of Environmental Protection must also review the plans for the tight tanks, which must comply with Title V regulations. But the entire review can take as long as three months.

The entire financial burden for tight tanks, from installation to pumping, is upon the homeowner; they pay for everything. As Frances Burnham of 30 Newtonville Road said, "It's punitive to place us on tight tanks."

Burnham pointed out that the sewer commissioners used extra sewer capacity allowed by the state to immediately hook in the community center, St. Anthony's Church and other municipal buildings to the existing sewer system. Yet sewer commissioners have refused to allow the four homes in Newtonville to hook in immediately using the additional state capacity. Health board member Kevin Ulmer has stated previously that the sewer commission has refused to acknowledge the seriousness of the health risks in the Newtonville area.

the 42 candidates are currently school superintendents.

"This is good news for Cohasset," Shea said. He hopes the new superintendent can be named by mid-June. The search committee, which is still forming, meets for the first time tonight. They will tackle interviews with about 10 semi-finalists after consultant, Jim Hardy of the state school committees' association, screens the applications.

Shea also said one of the candidates has requested confidentiality. Since this person is likely to be named a semi-finalist, the school board will probably conduct some of the interviews in executive session, he said. The board originally intended to hold these interviews in public, though the audience would not be able to ask questions. Shea said he preferred to honor the confidentiality request rather than lose strong candidates for the position. But the entire process will go public once the finalists are named. Shea expects about five people to make the final cut. Their identities should be known around May 18.

The new superintendent is expected to have a proven track record with a minimum of 10 years experience in education. The school board decided the new school chief should also be able to:

- Lead the staff in teaching the curriculum;
- Understand the Education Reform Act;
- Raise test scores;
- Encourage the staff to continue professional studies;
- Build good relations with the school board and the community;
- Achieve the school district's goals within the budget the town can afford.

The new superintendent is supposed to start work August 3. edition of South Look for a picture and a story.) The asking price for the 13-room Cape Colonial is $675,000. The house was built in 1783 by a Revolutionary War captain William Vinal.

The $2.3 million asking price for the Kennedy house raised some eyebrows because the figure roughly doubled the home's assessed value. According to Deborah Krupczak in the Cohasset Assessor's Office, the house's value was put at a little over one million dollars. Mary Ann Devine of Dwyer and Mullin Real Estate in Cohasset was the King's broker.

Michael Kennedy was killed in Aspen, Colo. in a Dec. 31 skiing accident. He was the son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Train mitigation panel may switch tracks

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Town officials could be ready to change the strategy they adopted a year ago to negotiate with the MBTA over the Greenbush train. An offer of help from Sen. William Delahunt's office prompted a discussion about an about-face. The offer coincided with yet another unresponsive letter from the T. Once again, they denied the train will increase Cohasset's flooding problems.

Greenbush is the third prong of the Old Colony restoration, and the project has posed more problems and provoked more anti-train reactions than the other branches. Plans call for building the tracks close to private homes, historic districts, vernal pools and other environmentally sensitive areas. Though nearby communities have confronted the T with lawsuits and public outcry, the Cohasset selectmen voted last August to steer a middle course and deal with the T.

But over the past year, the T has repeatedly brushed aside the evidence the train tracks will be under water in places if the engineers build it on the right of way as planned. Last week, another T letter repeated the same theme sounded for the last year. The train will not make Cohasset's flooding problems worse.

Roughly translated, this means the T will not compensate Cohasset for building the train in the flood plain. The message is one selectwoman Diane Sullivan called troubling.

She is also a member of the panel formed to literally "mitigate" the train's impact on the community. Pointing to the letter from T project manager Robert Egan, Sullivan said the T's claims undermine the town's hopes for controlling flooding around the James Brook.

Armed with that reply from the T, Sullivan and the panel took stock of their predicament. She and several other committee members considered looking to bigger guns than town and state officials to deal with the T. Primarily, the panel is hoping elected representatives will show them how the federal government agencies working with the town on the James Brook flood control project can be coordinated with the T. Sullivan said the committee would also have to keep working hard to produce "solid professional information" that proves the T is wrong.

The arms of the federal government already involved in Greenbush are the Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency, according to mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber. But Gruber wanted to ask Delahunt's aide to find out if other federal agencies might also be involved.

In addition to Delahunt's office, the panel expects to continue working with state Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree and other state officials.

The James Brook has been the top priority of the Mitigation Committee partly because the federal government, through the emergency management agency, has now come up with funding for a flood control project. But the project construction work will be in jeopardy if the T builds the track in the right of way by the flood plain.

In other developments, the committee voted to send a member of the Conservation Commission to a meeting between Egan and the state Department of Environmental Management. DEM has asked the T about the flood plain "structures." The board called the meeting an opportunity to introduce more accurate numbers on the heights water has reached during severe storms. Although FEMA has asked the town for new numbers and consultant Paul Shea has compiled them, the T has previously indicated it plans to use the old FEMA maps. As Sullivan put it, the T does not care if the train has to plow through water.

The panel also moved forward with hiring a consultant to review the train's impact on air quality, noise and vibrations in Cohasset. Tech Environmental of Waltham has won the contract, and Peter Goldberg is the consultant. Cohasset will pay $11,800 for his advice.

COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset Batmen start to heat up

For one heady weekend, the Cohasset Skippers held a regular season record over .500, the first time they had achieved this in 10 years. According to Cohasset High athletic director Clark Chatterton, 1988 was the last time the Skippers had more wins than losses before the tournament started. The 1996 squad had to win their final three games to earn a tourney berth, and then upped their overall record to 11-10 in the first game of the tournament, but never broke .500 during the regular season.

After dropping a game to the Hanover Indians, Cohasset swept South Shore Vo-Tech in a two-game series. In the first game, Ben Ketchum held the visitors scoreless for three innings and Cohasset posted a season-high 19 runs. Ketchum was masterful, but Coach Knurek decided to give his arm a rest and called in sophomore Greg O'Keefe. O'Keefe also took control, retiring five of the nine batters he faced on strikeouts. The offensive boost came from the entire team, but particularly from Greg Taylor and Mike Rossi, who both tripled and doubled; Denis Rooney, who smoked a triple; and Sean Conte, who also doubled. After scoring seven runs in the first, the home team coasted and the game was called after 4-1/2 innings, enough to get it in the books.

The second Vo-Tech game, although still a victory, was slightly less enjoyable. Jim O'Sullivan was not on top of his game. Backed by spotty fielding, he allowed eight runs, yielding a three-run headstart to the hosting Vo-Tech squad. On the strength of a Joe Pergola two-run double and Rossi's three hit, five RBI performance, Cohasset totaled 15 runs and escaped with a 15-8 victory. In the first, Rossi, who has been doing an outstanding job at second base, made an acrobatic diving catch in shallow right field. Ketchum made a spectacular play in the fifth inning, diving to make the catch in center, then firing to Rossi, who relayed it to Pergola to double up the runner off first.

Against Hull this Monday, the Skippers waited six innings too long to get in gear. Ketchum took the mound again and held the Pirates to one hit over three innings before things fell apart in the fourth. Under a shower of errors, Hull poured seven runs across before Parkinson could drop his catcher's equipment and relieve Ketchum, putting out the fire a few batters later. When Parkinson struggled in the fifth, Pete Minnar was called upon and pitched admirably for 1-2/3 innings, but the visiting Skippers trailed 11-0 heading into the seventh.

With two outs and no one on base, Schwerin walked and took second on Pat Hurley's single, then moved to third when Taylor singled to load the bases. An O'Sullivan single back through the box drove in two and Pergola reached on an error. Rossi walked, juicing the sacks again and O'Sullivan scored when a pick-off throw glanced off his leg into left field. Ketchum walked and Rooney collected a bases-loaded base on balls, driving home Pergola. Rossi scored when Minnar got a free pass, giving the comeback kids six runs. A Schwerin single brought Ketchum in and Hurley singled home Rooney, but the magic would end there and Cohasset went home with an 11-8 loss.

On Tuesday, the Boys in Blue had the opposite problem, hosting Norton, they started fast and barely limped to the finish line. Hurley reached on a fielder's choice and Rooney and Ketchum singled and Schwerin drove home Hurley with a fielder's choice. Conte's

BY MARK TRASK

Let's scream and shout for trout

His car swung south on Route 3A into the traffic, behind a big green truck that was dripping water all over the road. After a few hundred yards he realized he was following a state stocking truck and his heart began to beat fast. He had often heard about this and often caught some of the thousands of trout that had been stocked over the years, but this was it, right up close and personal.

A mile down the road the truck slowed to a crawl and swung off into a parking lot and stopped next to a wide pool in the meandering brook. Slowly the car rolled in behind and the driver squinted in the bright morning sun as he watched the operation unfold before him. The driver of the truck, a Massachusetts Fisheries and Wildlife worker dressed all in green, hopped out and strolled over to the edge of the parking lot, surveying the pool. Conditions were perfect. Recent rains had kept the water level up, enough so the falls to the right were running with a quiet rush of noise. The pool was quiet and reflective except for the occasional eddy escaping the upstream turmoil.

The troutman hopped aboard the body of the still running truck with a large net in hand and went right to work. He dipped great writhing netfuls of trout, wriggling and gleaming bright in the sun. Seconds later the fish were deposited in the pool. Some shot off into the deeper water. Others stayed nearby, as if stunned in their new environment. Over and over the stocking went on. Netful after netful of fish were emptied into the now swirling pool. All across the surface swirls could be seen as the trout zoomed from bank to bank, in a large new home, a far cry from their former home tanks. After a while the troutman stopped and prepared his truck to leave.. The stunned spectator rolled his car forward and through the window asked how many had been put in. About 500 replied the smiling man in green as he boarded the truck and once again headed south to another stocking destination.

Andy Walton of Hull and Scott Desmond of Scituate have been the beneficiaries of some of this year's fine stocking of trout. On separate trips to Spectacle Pond and another Cape pond they have had great luck, mostly using Berkley Power Bait. Andy limited with three fine rainbows, the largest a 1-lb., 2-oz. trout. Scott brought a fat 3-lb. rainbow in a day later. Nice fish!

Speaking of trout. There is a place, a small pond, that gets an annual stocking of 400 plus trout. The stocking takes place the day before the George Ward Memorial Derby at the Scituate rod and Gun Club. Rich would smile with a conspiratorial gleam as he reminded me that some of them are close to 5 pounds. Families with kids 12 and under should plan to make a day of it. The fishing is free. Trask Tackle provides free bait, bobbers and hooks. The club provides free refreshments. Over the years many Scituate and Cohasset youngsters have come face to face with their first fish at this fine event. Keep an eye out for more details as we draw closer to the end of May.

Bass and schoolies are flooding the local rivers and estuaries. Any keepers is the constant refrain now. Weir River, Cohasset Harbor, First Herring Brook, the North River and the South River have all given up early stripers. The keeper? Try the Canal according to state fishery guru Dick Turner. There is a large school from Wesport to the western approaches and they are surging into the Canal now on favorable tides.

Sailing club looking for one good boat

As the sailing season approaches, the Cohasset Sailing Club is looking to adopt a boat for use with their junior sailor training program this summer.

At present the organization has two boats for their youth sailing program and they are looking to a add a third to spread the work out more evenly among the vessels as well as to better serve the students. Budget constraints restrict the outright purchase of a launch this year, so they are turning to the community for help.

"It's not a situation where we are going to shut down the program if we don't get another boat, but another one on hand would be a great deal of help," said CSC representative Kevin O'Connor. "We've got more kids than ever interested in the program."

Specifications for the boat are that it be a 13- to 17-foot Whaler or similar craft with a 20- to 25-horsepower engine. If this description fits something sitting unused at the end of your driveway, the Cohasset Sailing Club wants to talk with you.

CSC's Junior Training Program has experienced a resurgence over the past few years with an increase in the number of participants and retention of a higher number of these sailors to the ages of 15- and 16-years-old.

"Chuck Peterson and his staff have been doing a great job with the program and keeping things interesting for the kids," explained O'Connor.

In addition to the number of participants, more sailors from the junior program are participating in regattas away from Cohasset Harbor. Another staff member will likely be added this year as well because of the growth of the program.

Preparations are already underway for the 1998 season at the Cohasset Sailing Club. Docks will be going into the water in early May and the sailing program is scheduled to begin the week of June 22. The board of directors has reviewed and approved facility and equipment upgrades and repairs for the upcoming season.

The CSC is a non-profit organization and can offer the combined benefit of a tax deduction and the satisfaction that you would be helping out a summer program. For more information please call Chuck Peterson ((383-6194), Kevin O'Connor (383-1290) or Peter Pescatore (383-2660).

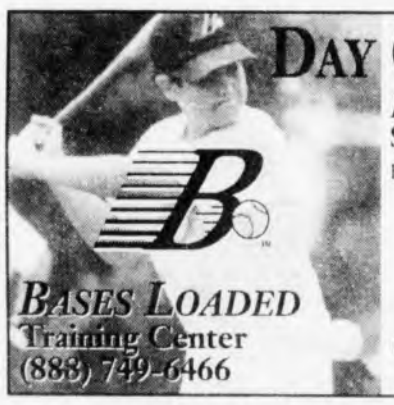
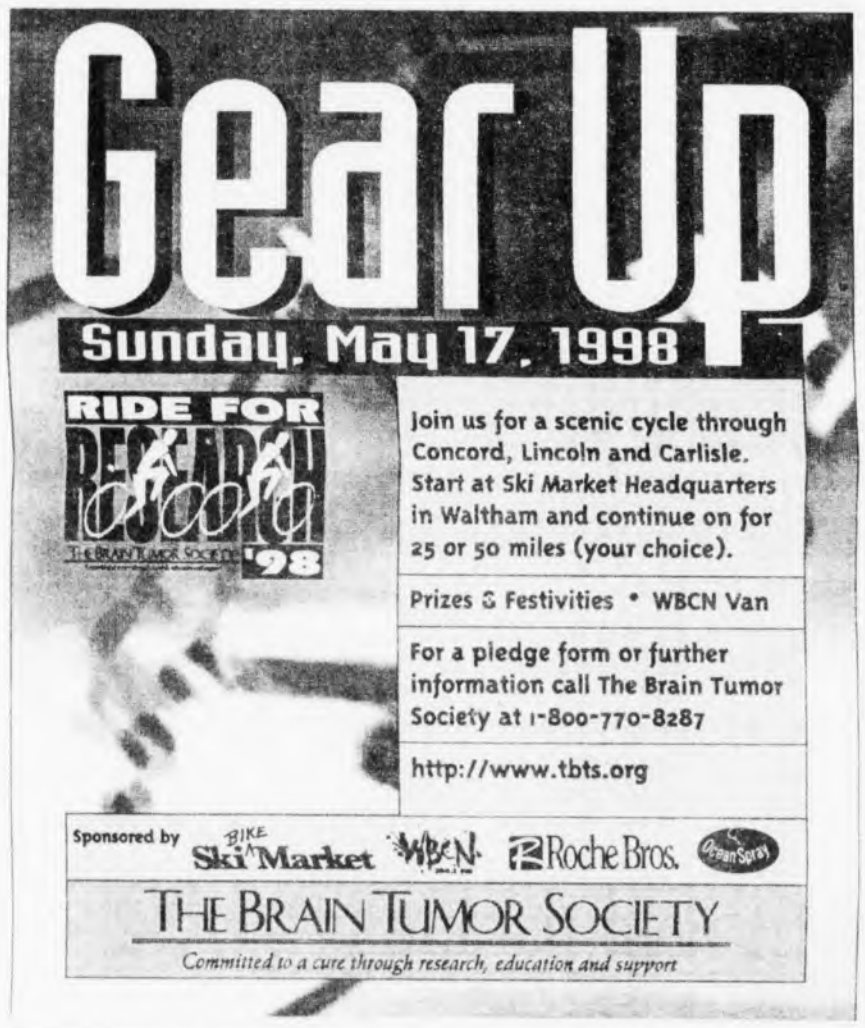
Cohasset Swim and Diving teams season opens



By Selma Ingber
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Swim and Diving teams are pleased to announce the opening of another great swim season. The season opens with the first practice on Wednesday, June 24 and ends with the Championships at Wheaton College on Saturday August 15.



We are pleased to announce that Allison Hughes is returning to coach the Cohasset Swim Team and Dawn Meehan will return to the Diving Team. Sadly, the Cohasset Swim Team Board accepted Becky Golden's resignation as co-coach as she graduates from college and pursued more permanent positions. Becky tells us she will remain our "number one fan" and we thank her for her contributions to the team in past seasons.

The Swim Team will be hiring an assistant coach to work for Allison and are asking any one interested in the position to contact Irene Barry at 383-1605, Selma Ingber at 383-9590 or Diane Shipp at 383-9198.

Try outs for new members will take place on Monday, June 22 and Tuesday, June 23 at the town pool from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. The team roster will be posted on Tuesday afternoon and parents are encouraged to check the roster and pick up a registration packet if their child joins the team. Try outs are for new members only. Returning members will be receiving their registration packets in mid-May and do not need to try out.

Diary of a Boston Marathon 'bandit' runner

Running on empty!

By Lesley Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

OK. I admit it. I'm a bona fide "bandit."

But, despite my outcast status, I ambled — one Vaseline-covered foot in front of the other — the same 26.2 mile course, Heartbreak Hill(s) and all, as the 12,000 runners who actually managed to get their hands on those coveted "official" numbers.

Banish me for not planning ahead to raise money for cancer research (procrastination is my middle name). Sue me for not running another marathon in the 3 hours, 30 minutes (are you serious?) necessary to qualify for Boston's trek. I wanted to — honest.

What can I say? I was a marathon virgin. But I promise I'll plan ahead next time.

Yes, there will be a next year.

Because as they say, I've been bitten and bitten hard. With the marathon bug, that is.

After all was said and run, I managed to cross the finish line in 3 hours, 50 minutes despite my fears that I was destined to make my debut on the nightly news. I imagined Chet's and Natalie's words: "It's 11 p.m. and the runners are still coming in..."

Now that I've put those fears to rest, I can concentrate on next year.

And while I'm planning to do it the "official" way next year and actually earn one of those Mylar wraps (which, by the way, don't do a bit of good when a steady wind is blowing), there are a few perks to running at what some call the "back of the pack."

First of all, I actually had a chance to witness the elite break out of the gate. If that's not a humbling experience, I don't know what is. Some day, like when Titanic director James Cameron checks his ego at the door, I'll be up there, I thought.

Until then, I'll continue to pay homage to the running gods.

It's a good thing a marathon official warned me and my fellow "bandit" crew (Danielle and Brian, for the record): "I hope you're going to wait until the elite runners pass before you jump in." Nah, we're anxious to find out first-hand what it feels like to get trampled by a pack of gazelles, I mean runners, I felt like telling her.

Once we did jump in, much to my pleasant surprise, I found my stride and well, ran with it. But I can't take all the credit — I couldn't have done it without my comrades — marathon veterans, if you will. (We split up about mile 18 and they finished an impressive 3 hours, 30 minutes.) We were really cruising for a while.

From the beginning, we entertained ourselves and others (we only hoped) by belting out tunes. Singing while running is not all that difficult, I discovered.

"How ya doing?" Danielle and Brian would occasionally ask. "Great," I'd say, really meaning it.

Until about Mile 15. That's when I got an unpleasant surprise; the apple cinnamon Power Bar I ate eons earlier (8 a.m. to be more exact) came back to haunt me. There's nothing like a little indigestion to liven up a marathon.

It was at that point, I think, that I became non-verbal. Sorry, no more tunes.

After that, I let the crowd carry me. It's completely true what marathon runners say about the crowds and cheers. At times when I really needed it, and at times when I didn't, one spectator's scream or the steady chorus of several sent chills through me.

Brian even did a bit of cheering himself. For example, when he came across someone holding a sign declaring, "You can do it Mrs. Sullivan!" he promptly yelled out as he ran by, "You can do it Mrs. Sullivan!" It sort of threw the sign-holder for a loop but it made us laugh.

"High fives" are also very important. On Danielle's and Brian's advice, I gave as many as I could to the lines of outstretched hands along the course. It really did make a difference. Except, of course, when I high-fived the kid holding out an orange.

I have to dish out the most kudos to the crowd at Wellesley College, Boston College, and Kenmore Square — truly standouts when it comes to motivating runners.

Of course, my family was a welcome sight at Mile 17. Friends popped up between Mile 20 and 22. After years of watching my father run, I never realized how great it was to see those familiar faces.

Another thing I never realized is just how tricky it is to run and drink from Dixie cups filled with clutch single scored Rooney and Ketchum, making the score 3-1.

Cohasset Skippers start to heat up

Hurley pitched a gutsy game, but his defense didn't make the big plays and he allowed two singles to lead off the fifth. In relief, O'Sullivan fared no better, and the Lancers took the lead 5-3. That would be all the visitors would need. Cohasset scraped together one more in the seventh when Taylor walked, O'Sullivan singled and Pergola's single hit home Taylor, but it was too little too late.

Now with a disappointing 5-6 record, Cohasset must win at least five of their last nine just to qualify for the tournament. An away game against East Bridgewater Thursday kicks off a three-game road trip and the Skippers would do well to post some wins during the next week if they hope to remain viable for the state tournament.

water at the same time. I started to catch on about half-way through the marathon. By next year, I'll have it down. I'll be the one drinking two, three cups at a time.

Speaking of drinking, that's the official spectator sport of the day. Whether it be on the sidelines outside of local watering holes or just on the, er, sidelines, the whiff of alcohol can be enough to get you drunk by association. By the time I hit the top of Heartbreak Hill, the crowd at Boston College was good and rowdy. Take it from me, a B.C. alum. Except this time, it was anything but Miller Time for a Belmont-Springs-gulping-me.

In any case, I made it to the very end. Somehow, I figured when I saw the sign "One mile to go," the rest of the race would be, uh, downhill. Not exactly. That last mile was brutal.

When I crossed that line, as I waited for my legs to turn into Jello, I spotted my father and made my way over to him. What I had not realized was that I had apparently crossed some gate I was not supposed to re-cross.

"Even to get some water?" I asked the marathon official in disbelief.

"Are you a 'bandit' or an official runner?" he shot back.

"You've got to be kidding," I thought. "Look buddy, you don't want to see what happens if I don't get some water in this system pronto. I may just spontaneously decompose."

He must have read my mind because he let me through.

Faster than you can say shin splints, I gulped about 7,000 of those cups of water. Then, I headed home to recover. While trekking down stairs was tough, I didn't fare too poorly the days following the big race. I'm already planning next year's strategy.

Now, if only these blisters would hurry up and heal.

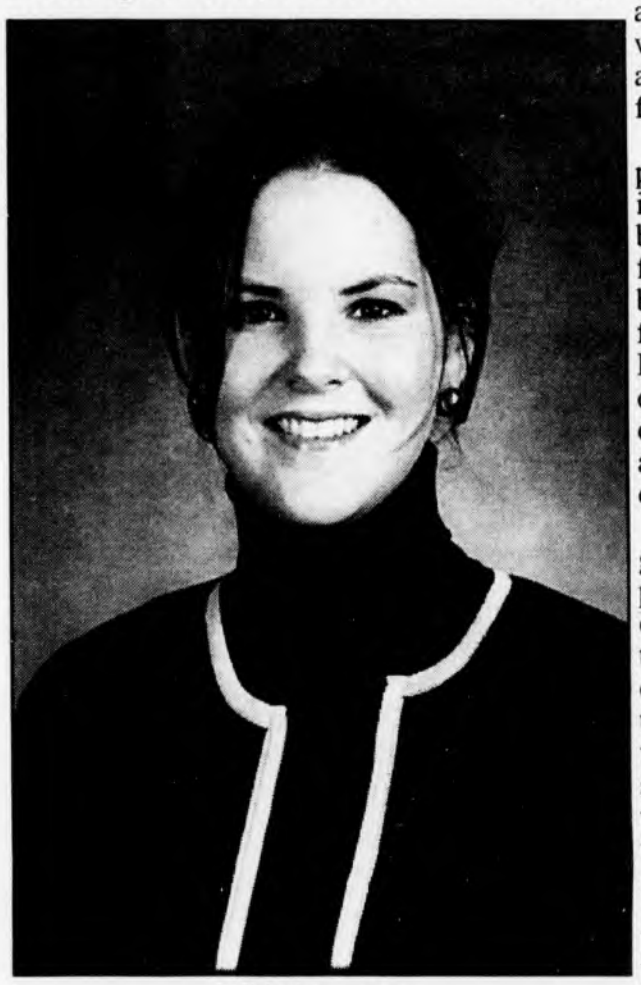
Cohasset native hopes Kennedy Center internship will lead to Broadway



By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

In today's competitive job market, many college students are jump-starting their careers by pursuing job internships in their chosen fields before graduation.

To bolster her musical theatre education from the Catholic University of America, Cohasset native Elizabeth Deveney has been interning at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington D.C., where she works in the Performing Arts Centers and Schools (PACES) Partners in Education Program.

"It's an exciting work environment," Deveney, 22, said in a telephone interview from D.C. "I'm honored and fortunate to work here. There are so many things going on and so many people to meet."

Selected from a pool of more than 600 applicants, Deveney serves as one of the center's 22 winter-spring interns, lending a hand with special events planning and attending weekly seminars and theatrical performances.

Liz Deveney

"The whole experience has been incredible. It bridges the gap from my academic background to my future career," said Deveney, who dreams of some day running a theater — especially on Broadway.

The PACES program aims to assist performing arts centers throughout the nation develop or expand educational partnerships with their local school systems, integrating arts into the classroom, she said.

"It's a way to enliven teaching," Darrell Ayers, senior program manager, said of the 7-year-old program which serves 36 states. "We use arts to teach art and to teach other curriculum areas as well."

Deveney has been evaluating the different teams participating in PACES, working with various communities to measure the program's success, and she helped plan the PACES annual meeting.

"It's exactly what I want. I get to see what arts administration is like before I graduate," Deveney said.

During her internship, Deveney has also had some other interesting opportunities, including attending seven performances at the center and helping Debbie Allen hold auditions.

"Liz has fit in very well with the organization here," Ayers said.

Located on 17 acres overlooking the Potomac River, the Kennedy Center has earned the reputation of being America's busiest arts facility, presenting more than 2,800 performances each year for audiences approaching 2 million.

Deveney, who graduates in May, has some local experience with theater program management. For the past several summers, Deveney has orchestrated the Cohasset Recreation Department's children's drama workshop. She will be returning to the workshop this summer and then plans to apply for theater jobs in Boston.

Magical musical fairy tale on stage June 5-7

By Elizabeth Rachel Ingber
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The lives of fairy tale characters are intertwined in a magical story of hope, humor, faith, grief and love in the show, "Into the Woods." This delightful show is going to be performed June 5, 6 and 7 by "Cohasset Plays By The Sea," as their third major production. Director Ron Nicynski, music director Katie Buckley, choreographer Janet Campbell, and assistant music director Grace Gardner lead 22 talented cast members, who are all currently participating in a vigorous rehearsal schedule, in preparation for the upcoming show. Prior performances by this talented theater group include "Annie," performed in January of 1998, and "The Wizard of Oz," performed in January of 1997.

The score of "Into the Woods" is composed by Stephan Sondheim, and its script is written by James Lapine. It is a story, which mixes classical fairy tales, including "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Cinderella," and "Little Red Riding Hood," and sends the characters into the woods, a place symbolizing the confusion that the characters undergo as they "get the thing, which makes it worth the journeying." However, the usual events of the tales are altered, due to a baker and his wife, who are under a curse, which prevents them from having children. In order to lift the spell, they must go into the woods, and bring back four items which belong to the fairy tale characters, such as Jack's cow and Little Red Riding Hood's cape. Though the show uses fractured fairy tales, the themes could appeal to an adult audience as well as children. The characters evolve and grow as they face and solve their problems, learn from their mistakes, develop trust in each other, and work to keep hope and faith alive as they face many obstacles. "Into the Woods" provides viewers with fun, delight, hope and lessons that every person, young and old, can learn.

Watch for future articles regarding tickets for the actual show June 5, 6 and 7.

The cast includes: Narrator, Brian Krupczak; the baker, Ryan Story; the baker's wife, Meredith O'Hayre; Cinderella, Mareth Collins-Wooley; Jack, David Ingber; Jack's mother, Marisa Mellow; Little Red Riding Hood, Katie Roche; witch, Ali Kinchla; Rapunzel, Meredith Bates; stepmother, Grace Gardner; Florinda, Caroline Carr; Lucinda, Krista Nicynski; Cinderella's prince, Jim O'Sullivan; Rapunzel's prince, Bill Kearney; mysterious man, Alex Russell; wolf, Ryan Long; Granny, Sera Genovese; steward, Sean Conte; Cinderella's mother/Snow White, Elizabeth Ingber; Cinderella's father, Joseph Nicynski and Sleeping Beauty, Clara Sceery.

Editor's note —

Prior to the actual show, the cast members will participate in several fund-raisers. The first will be May 23 at 7:30 p.m. at the Hull Methodist Church in Hull Village. The cast will be performing excerpts from "Into the Woods," and it will be a very entertaining performance. If you are interested in the show, you should attend the fund-raiser to preview "Into the Woods." Five-dollar tickets will be sold in advance by calling 383-2240.

School Notebook

College night tonight at CHS

The Annual Coastline College Night, sponsored by Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Hull, will be held this year at Cohasset High School Thursday, April 30, from 7 to 9 p.m. Approximately 175 colleges will be represented by admission counselors to meet with parents and students and to answer questions anyone might have.

Cohasset hosts post-prom party

The first annual Post-Prom All-Night Party will be held at Cohasset High School on June 3. The Prom will be held at the Marriott Long Warf in Boston. After after the Prom the students will return to CHS for a night of FUN. A Disc Jockey, a casino, and a breakfast are some of the events that are being planned.

The ticket price will be $30 per attendee. Student tickets will not cover the entire expenses for the evening. Please help support this event and send your donation to: Cohasset Post Prom Party, 16 Woodland Drive, Cohasset.

Also if you would like to volunteer to help on the committee. Please contact: Diane Dooley at 383-6448 or Margaret Tufts at 383-6985.

Bring-A-Bike Day Trike-A-Thon

St. Jude Children's Research Hospital's Bring-A-Bike Day safety program will be held at the South Shore Community Center in Cohasset the morning of May 6. This program is to encourage safe riding behavior among young children and to raise money to fight childhood cancer.

Because bicycle accidents are a major problem with American children, Bring-A-Bike Day aims at making children aware of bike safety at an early age through the use of safety stories and special coloring sheets. By asking the children to show these safety messages to their parents, they are exposing these youngsters to good habits.

The storytelling and coloring periods will be followed by Bring-A-Bike Day Wednesday, May 6, when the children will put into practice the lessons learned.

Parents of children at the South Shore Community Center will seek pledges for St. Jude Hospital during this program. St. Jude Hospital is the leading center for the study of childhood cancer which, next to accidents, is the leading killer of children.

For more information on Bring-A-Bike Day May 6, call Janyce Brown at 383-9828 or Andrea Kinnealey at 383-2848.

State mosquito report is troubling, officials say

In general, the 1997 mosquito problem in Cohasset could be classified as an "average nuisance." However, on the state level, the final report issued by the Eastern Equine Encephalitis Survey of the Massachusetts Department of Health noted that the number of mosquitoes detected harboring the Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) virus totaled 25, well above 10, which was the median over the last 29 years.

The 1997 isolations were made from samples collected in Kingston, Halifax, Carver, Lakeville and New Bedford.

The report went on to say, "This number of EEE virus isolates and the fact that a human case of EEE occurred (in Plainville) will place Massachusetts at a moderate level of EEE risk beginning in the 1998 season." The Massachusetts Department of Public Health uses a scale for EEE risk as low, moderate, high and emergency.

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee strongly urges citizens to initiate surveys of the area surrounding each house. Particular attention should be paid to objects such as old tires, bird baths, toy pails, gutters, etc., and surface areas where stagnant water may collect.

It takes only a few days of such stagnation to permit hatching of adult mosquitoes from previously deposited eggs. Water in bird baths and wading pools should be changed at least once a week.

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee strongly urges citizens to initiate surveys of the area surrounding each house. Particular attention should be paid to objects such as old tires, bird baths, toy pails, gutters and surface areas where stagnant water may collect.

If your area has a sizable expanse of stagnant water (e.g., a small pond) or even a depression in the ground which repeatedly retains small quantities of water for three days to a week, it is essential either to drain such areas or to apply a biological inhibitor, such as a preparation containing the bacterium Bacillus thuringiensis (BTi), which is harmless to humans and pets, but which prevents development of adult mosquitoes. These inhibitors are available as powders, "dunks," or sprays in most garden supply or hardware stores.

Since small children and the elderly constitute the two age groups most vulnerable to the impact of EEE virus, it is especially important that persons responsible for the well-being of these age groups be familiar with precautions that should be taken to prevent exposure to the disease.

Current information about mosquito control provided by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, the Audubon Society, and general medical media is available to Cohasset residents in a hang-pocket located in the entry area of town hall, the Paul Pratt Library and the Senior Center.

For further information, you may call the Cohasset Board of Health (383-4116), leaving your name and telephone number so that a member of the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee (CMCC) can call you personally. You may also leave a message in the mailbox of the CMCC in town hall.

Cohasset's Week

Spring cleaning at water department

As the spring 1998 construction period has begun, C.W.S. wants to inform the residents of Cohasset as to the schedule of projects this year:

- Cleaning and lining on Pleasant Street April 10 - May 4.
- Cleaning and lining on Atlantic Avenue May 4-26.
- Cleaning and lining on Jerusalem Road May 26 - July 15.

C.W.S. would like to remind residents of Cohasset that temporary discoloration in the construction areas can happen off and on during the cleaning and lining process. The discoloration is only temporary and the water is safe to drink.

Library eyes Osgood School

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The library trustees are eyeing the space at Osgood School, the selectmen learned Tuesday. The news came several months after the trustees appeared to give up on the idea of moving and has put the Osgood School search temporarily on hold.

The search for a buyer for the elementary school building was expected to move forward at the May 5 selectmen's meeting. The board was slated to take a final look at the official request for proposals from developers and contractors. In an interview last week Town Manager Mark Haddad anticipated few eleventh-hour problems. Two board members, selectman Merle Brown and selectmen Chairwoman Ronnie McMorris, were working closely with the committee formed to study the possibilities for the building.

The Osgood School is to be vacated when school ends this June. Next September, the elementary school students will be attending

Lids chief knows how to spot trends

Think of it as a "tee-shirt for the head." The once un-chic baseball cap is coming out of the closet and claiming its rightful place on the fashion show runway. According to a Cohasset woman who sells Red Sox hats and many other varieties of toppers, casual headgear is "in."

Nancy Babine Kuchinski, the president and chief operating officer of Lids, said in an interview this week, hats make up "part of The Look."

Lids has a location in the Braintree Mall, but the company has gone nationwide. More than 200 Lids stores have been opened in 40 states since the company started up four years ago, selling mainly baseball caps. Its success has won local recognition for Kuchinski, 43. She was inducted March 28 into her high school Hall of Fame. She was graduated from Arlington Catholic in the Class of 1972. After college at Simmons and a climb up the corporate ladder at The Limited and Reebok, she is now into baseball hats.

Yup, these are basically the same kind of hats the real ballplayers once wore. Baseball caps—the comfortable, slightly goofy kind that looked better with a grass stain over the dome. The same old reliable kind the players crumpled up and stashed in their back pockets. Ever ready to be snapped out and clapped over the jersey when the National Anthem blasted through the stadium. They were clotted up with resin and maybe a little Vaseline under the visor then. Call them sloppy or even homely. The baseball cap brimmed with the symbolic meaning of the game. It was the prop when the count went to three and two. Touching it was part of the ritual, right after the finger twitch and the bubble gum.

Now it is called "the ultimate headwear," and it belongs to the Gen X and Gen Y fashion statement. The news could have Impos-

Welcome mat out for haz-mat center

Cohasset will house a permanent collection center for household hazardous wastes, the selectmen decided Tuesday. In a split vote, a majority of the board favored allowing the center to go up inside the Recycling Transfer Facility, to be used by residents of the town and 14 surrounding South Shore communities. Selectmen Merle Brown and Thomas Callahan and selectwoman Roseann McMorris came out for the center. Selectwoman Diane Sullivan voted against the deal which was contingent on an OK from town counsel and on assurances having the center will not increase the town's liability insurance payments. Selectwoman Nan Roth abstained.

Roth said she might vote for the center if she had more information.

The center was supported by member of the Recycling Committee Arthur Lehr. John McNabb also backed the proposal by the South Shore Regional Refuse Disposal Planning Board. McNabb said the center would make it more convenient for people to dispose of hazardous wastes properly. The South Shore communities cooperate on hazardous waste collection days now, allowing residents to dispose of wastes at another community's collection day. But this center would be a permanent facility.

The hazardous wastes to be collected are basically products people use around the house, according to chemist Carol Swete. She said the products collected would be antifreeze, cleaners, solvents, photography developing chemicals, paint and other types of hazardous wastes used to care for homes, cars and lawns. She said the center would not be advertised to the public but only to the health boards or public works officials in the communities. People out-

Clarification on bus service sought

Town Manager Mark Haddad has written to the school committee to seek clarification and official action regarding Lamberts Lane and whether a school bus turnaround there is needed.

"Since Lamberts Lane is a private way, the town cannot expend funding to complete this project," Haddad said. "It has been brought to the town's attention that the residents of Lamberts Lane would be willing to fund the cost of construction if the town could act as a facilitator. Before this can take place, the country club need to be contacted about committing land to this project, and the size of the turnaround needs to be determined."

Haddad said selectmen cannot take action until the school committee determines whether it is going to provide bus service to Lamberts Lane.

Virtual Greenbush

Train opponents launch new Web site

"However you look at it, 45 percent of the voters were in favor of the train—it's not as if the whole of Hingham is against it."

David Clinton,
TRAIN PROPONENT

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Mike Weymouth of Hingham designed the new Web site.

The Greenbush debate has arrived on the Internet. Michael Weymouth of Hingham, founder of Concerned Citizens Against the Train (CCAT), has designed www.greenbushhotline.com, an interactive Web site.

Hingham's Eric Pence helps maintain the site in general, while Alexander Macmillan, who is Greenbush coordinator for Hingham, covers the "Breaking News" section, which is a continuously updated file of news clippings.

The three men first discussed starting up a Web site three months ago. Explained Weymouth, "We were in agreement that the Internet is a great communicator and decided a Web site could be a conduit for opinion and provide a view of how the Greenbush segment of the Old Colony railroad line would affect the Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate communities."

While the site is decidedly anti-train, Weymouth hopes to attract people from both sides of the issue. In fact, there's a link called "Return Fire," where people who are hoping for the return of the Greenbush line can comment. Other places on the site also provide a voice to pro-train browsers.

But William Grimes of the pro-train group "Back on Track" believes that the site is preaching to the choir and that minds have been made up in the Greenbush communities for some time regarding the rail issue. In his view, the issue will be resolved in the courts.

Indeed, Grimes believes that a better name for the site would be the "Greenbush-NOT!-Line." The lack of an identifying name on the Web site to say what individual or group is hosting it, reminds Grimes of the anonymous anti-Greenbush flyers once left on cars in Hingham parking lots.

When the site is first called up, a montage of Greenbush-related news clippings appear. Click on to read the articles or click onto a variety of other categories.

"Where They Stand" has color headshots of residents, business leaders, politicians and community activists with their stated views about the train. The towns of Scituate and Cohasset have yet to be filled in, but Weymouth is hopeful that the residents and selectmen of the three towns will provide their statements, whether for the train or against it.

The "Op/Ed" section has editorials written by Weymouth and "Media Watch" is a continuously updated gathering of Greenbush-related news clippings.

"Maps" highlight the path of the railbed through the South Shore. Weymouth plans to place photographs of historic homes situated near the tracks and to dot the maps at the 43 Greenbush grade crossings.

The Greenbush Web site features a mock up of a commuter train coming through Hingham Square.

"Greenbush Perspective" offers reading material about the MBTA's interest in restoring rail service to the New Bedford area and how the Greenbush line might be a stepping stone to that project.

"Site Links" connects to a number of federal Environmental Protection Agency sites that provide information on issues such as diesel exhaust's affect on the environment. It also connects to the MBTA's official Web site "to try to provide a fair distribution of information from both sides," said Weymouth.

"Virtual Greenbush" provides a still photo of a true-to-scale train running through Hingham Square with Bowl & Board and St. Paul's Church in the background. For those who have a fast modem and the means to quickly download a video, a Quick Time movie of a whistling train passing through Hingham Square can also be accessed.

"To maintain accuracy, the train itself was filmed and recorded on the Old Colony line in South Weymouth, which is the kind of train that would come to Hingham," explained Weymouth.

Grimes also contends that the repeated whistling played on the Quick Time movie is longer than the one whistle used for closely-spaced crossings.

Another "Back on Track" member, secretary David Clinton, sounded almost weary after viewing the site. "We've studied this thing to death," said Clinton. "Study after study after study and then we go back and do it again. However you look at it, 45 percent of the voters were in favor of the train—it's not as if the whole of Hingham is against it."

But Macmillan argues for the site and its David and Goliath aspect.

"The little guy on either side can make his point of view available on the Web to anyone who will seek him out," he said.

Jerry Gulla, a senior software engineer at Sun Microsystems, Chelmsford, was asked by this newspaper to log on to the Quick Time movie and offer an outsider's unbiased opinion. In his estimation, the depiction of the train's movement and sound is "sort of a reasonable approximation for what you can expect — a train whizzing by and making all kinds of noise. It's sort of annoying."

Despite his current actions, by nature, Web site creator Weymouth doesn't see himself as a political person. He credits his work with Save the Children for giving him much of the impetus for this project.

It was during a Save the Children volunteer visit to a Nepal village that Weymouth and his wife, Peggy, learned that the leading cause of death for the world's population under five years of age is lung damage from cooking fire smoke.

"It's not that the information isn't there. All the government has to do is say, 'Build chimneys,' but they don't so the children have hacking coughs, and all that cooking fire smoke that offers them warmth stays trapped in their homes and lungs," he said.

It wasn't much of a stretch from there for Weymouth to correlate Greenbush's diesel fumes and their purported detrimental effect on the environment with a lack of information on the subject, and he began attending town meetings and doing his own research to understand the issue better.

Around that same time, Weymouth was reading Jonathan Harr's "A Civil Action," which chronicles a legal battle in Woburn about leukemia rates in that town. The story strengthened his view that the public needs to be informed of potential environmental hazards.

As far as building a tunnel under Hingham Square to reduce fumes as well as noise and traffic obstruction, construction of a garage on his property — which lies some 500 feet south of the rail bed and therefore that much further away from the water — caused Weymouth to doubt the soundness of such an idea.

"I am not an expert on these things, but if the tide is rising and falling in a sandy hole under my garage, I think there's an issue there," he said. "Dig 1 1/2 feet and it's a perfect beach."

Despite his concerns, Weymouth still says he welcomes diverse viewpoints.

"I'm not simply trying to preach to the converted on this site," he said. "A credible conduit for opinion welcomes the opinion of the opposition. It's only fair."

This raises the issue of accessibility. Nancy Buckley, founder of the grassroots organization "Coastal Coalition," was not able to access the site through her computer. While the Web may be the means of world communication in the future, it is not in every home yet.

Despite that limitation, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said, "Any information is good information, right? But being one who is not too computer literate and well versed on the ways of the Internet, I think it is an informative site."

When asked if he believes the issue is no longer in need of community involvement, Hedlund answered, "Greenbush is still being discussed on a number of levels. Aside from the court case, there are some budgetary issues classes in a brand new school building behind the Deer Hill School. Schools superintendent Stephen Hart said previously he expects the new school to be ready by Sept. 1. Since there is a possibility the new structure will not be ready in time for the first day of school, the Osgood might figure in the school department's contingency plan. The question should be answered by mid-July, and the final decision about Osgood is supposed to go before the fall town meeting. Timing has been a consideration for fear the building will deteriorate if it is left vacant for a substantial period of time.

"My biggest fear is come October I'm going to have a building sitting there with no budget to maintain it," Haddad said Tuesday. He brokered a May 14 meeting between the Osgood School Reuse Committee and the library trustees to go over the options. The selectmen are still likely to see the final RFP at their May 18 meeting. Haddad and reuse board Chairman Chris Ford said the committee still leaned towards building some type of elderly housing for the elderly. But both said the housing and the library could be combined in the building. The other options were:

- Senior congregate housing, described as similar to assisted living;
- Multi-generational care which could include elderly housing and a children's day care center;
- Other community uses;
- Low and moderate income housing.

"Let us go through the process," said Haddad who wants the RFP advertised this month, if possible. "That still gives the library four or five months to come up with their proposal. It still gives the town meeting a chance to decide."

Library trustees Barbara Power and Patience Towle said they expected to have a proposal ready by the fall. Meanwhile, they put the selectmen on notice they will look beyond the neighborhood by the Paul Pratt Library to solve their space needs. Towle said the library, now crammed inside an 8,000 square foot building, wants to trade up to 15,000 square feet. The cost of rebuilding the Paul Pratt Library comes to about the same price (roughly $2.5 million) as building a library inside the Osgood would be. But the Osgood looked like the more attractive option of the two. Towle said state aid would be easier to get to build at the Osgood. Both trustees also said they preferred not to expand the existing building because there is no town-owned property nearby. Doubling the shelf space there and adding more parking would mean a land taking by eminent domain. Power implied being party to a land grab was not the way the library liked to operate.

"We're not the Turnpike Authority," she said. "This isn't our style."

side town would have to get a permission slip from their local officials to bring materials to the Cohasset center. They would have to pay about $40 for the disposal. They would also have to make an appointment with Swete in advance.

Swete said she or another chemist would supervise the disposal and take care of the administration. The benefit to Cohasset residents would be they could use the center for a reduced rate. Swete said the rate might be half the regular price and could be free, for at least a few residents every month depending on the volume.

Swete said the center would be three, 10 by eight double-walled steel buildings. They will be mounted on a cement platform and will be fireproof "and pretty-much tamper proof." Plans also call for building a security fence around the center.

She asked the board to allow the center so South Shore Regional Refuse could take advantage of a grant. The money earmarked for the project came from a DPW surplus and had to be used by the end of May.

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches

We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

We do party platters and catering

Town takes action against Cohasset Heights Landfill

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Building Inspector Robert Egan has filed a criminal complaint against the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill in Quincy District Court to shut down the facility permanently. Egan issued a shut down order against CHL in January because of a serious permit violation. CHL appealed the decision to the zoning board of appeals last month, but the ZBA upheld Egan's shut down order. Despite the order, CHL has refused to shut down and has filed a lawsuit against the town in land court seeking to overturn Egan's decision.

CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said previously that owners of the landfill will continue to appeal the decisions of the building inspector.

The criminal complaint comes at a time when the anti-landfill group, SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), is lobbying the health board to rescind CHL's site assignment because of the shut down order and numerous environmental violations. John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of SAFE, will present the group's case to the health board on Tuesday, May 12. Health board member Kevin Ulmer said he felt certain that there would be site assignment hearings, although he could not say when they might begin. Ulmer added it is also unclear at this time whether the health board would seek to modify CHL's site assignment or rescind it.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said the criminal complaint is in response to CHL's refusal to obey the building inspector's orders and shut down the landfill.

"The law requires them to obey the building inspector's orders and close down, but they have not done that," DeRensis said. "That is a criminal wrong, and if you engage in a criminal action, then you should be charged as a criminal."

DeRensis said the purpose of the criminal complaint is to force CHL to comply with Egan's order and close the landfill. He added that he was also pursuing several other proposals to deal with CHL and was just waiting for Town Manager Mark Haddad to approve additional action.

"The law requires them to obey the building inspector's orders and close down, but they have not done that. That is a criminal wrong, and if you engage in a criminal action, then you should be charged as a criminal."
Town Counsel Paul DeRensis

But McNabb is worried that the criminal complaint is not an adequate response from the town. He is disappointed that the town didn't even try to get a court injunction forcing CHL to shut down immediately. McNabb fears that the criminal complaint could result in nothing more than a punitive fine that CHL could easily afford to pay

"It's just not good enough," McNabb said. "This is an appropriate action and it's nice, but it's not enough."

McNabb is disappointed that the health board has taken no action against CHL for dumping refuse in a section of the facility where landfilling is not allowed. Last November, McNabb found 7,800 square feet of material in a section of the landfill not approved for dumping, Area IV-B.

The health board has also discovered that CHL has illegally placed as much as 100,000 tons of material on the slopes of the landfill in violation of DEP regulations. DEP regulates the angle of the slope of the sides of the landfill to ensure that the material stays in place.

McNabb said the health board has known about the illegal fill in Area IV-B for six months, but taken no action. SAFE members want the health board to rescind CHL's site assignment, an action that would order the shut down of the landfill in addition to the Egan's order.

Ulmer said the health board is awaiting analyses from its consultant, Camp Dresser and McKee (CDM), of several issues relevant to site assignment hearings.

McNabb is skeptical of the health board's claim that it needs more information to schedule site assignment hearings. He said the health board has everything it needs to begin hearings immediately.

Ulmer countered that there are several pieces of information the health board still needs. CDM currently is examining records from the Department of Environmental Protection from the last 20 years tracking CHL's measurements of the landfill's contours. Once a month, DEP requires landfill owners to submit updated contour measurements and figures on the amount of material placed in the landfill in the previous 30 days.

Ulmer said the health board is creating an historical record showing exactly when CHL began overfilling the contours and how much excess material is in the landfill.

"At the hearing about the contours, it became very clear that the existing slopes contained huge amounts of excess material," Ulmer said. "We didn't even realize DEP tracked the contour measurements until we found out about the extra material."

Ulmer added that the health board wants to make sure it has a solid case against CHL before going any further. He said that Egan's shut down order and the ZBA's decision were both facing court challenges from CHL. Ulmer said it would not be wise for the health board to base its decision to hold hearings on the shut down orders from Egan and the ZBA. If those orders are overturned in court, then the health board's hearings could be declared invalid, Ulmer said.

DEP is also considering action against CHL. Ulmer said health board members are reluctant to rush forward until it is clear what DEP is going to do.

"The health board is coordinating with the town manager, town counsel and the building inspector," Ulmer said. "It is a complicated issue and no one has the full picture. We need clarification on what some of these other parties are doing because we don't have all the answers."

Petition asks selectmen to stall sewer town meeting

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A group of citizens in the Linden Drive area have petitioned the selectmen. They want the board to delay calling a special town meeting on the north Cohasset sewer project until a public informational meeting on the issue can be held.

They also want the contract which came in at $2.7 million over estimates rebid. Both requests will be considered at the May 18 board meeting, it was decided May 5. The selectmen tabled a discussion on the matter Tuesday night because the sewer commissioners were not able to attend the meeting.

Linden Drive and surrounding streets are part of the now $9.9 million north Cohasset sewer project which will ultimately hook about 277 homes up to a sewer main which will take the wastewater to the Hull treatment plant.

But the request to appropriate the additional money to fund the $2.7 overage failed to win the 2/3 majority required at town meeting. Margy Charles, 85 Linden Drive, who signed the petition, was among the ranks that supported the additional appropriation at town meeting.

"I am very interested in getting the funding," Charles said. "But we'd like to clear up all the confusion before going to a crazy town meeting like the last one."

This group is not affiliated with Concerned Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES) which wants to halt the current project and look at sewering the entire town.

"We are not a hostile group," said Catherine Davis, 52 Linden Drive. "We trust our officials but we need more information.

"Just as the president gives a state of the union — we need a state of the sewer," she said.

Davis said the group has no name and is just a collection of neighbors seeking answers and clarification on the sewer issue.

Due to the unexpectedly high cost, the only part of the north Cohasset project going forward at this time is the laying of the sewer main in the streets, known as Contract 1. Contracts 2, 3, & 4 which will hook the homes up to the sewer main are on hold.

Selectmen plan to either rebid Contracts 2, 3 & 4 or use the remaining money to buy the components which the town would then hand over to the individual homeowners' for installation. The "component option" surfaced after the annual town meeting and is one reason why sewer commissioners feel a special town meeting on the sewer is needed.

Selectmen said they might consider calling a special town meeting after they see if the sewer commissioners have a substantive reason for one. They planned to invite sewer commissioners to their meeting Tuesday but that was postponed until May 18 because two of the three commissioners were out of town. The commissioners have previously gone on the record to favor going ahead with the second phase of the project. It calls for hooking up homes around Straits Pond to the sewers.

But the selectmen want the second leg of the job, dubbed "contract 2," to be put out to bid again as part of a package with contract 3 and contract 4. They hoped they might get a more favorable price by bundling all three jobs.

So far, the dispute has resulted in a series of conflicting letters to the contractor Duncan Peterson. His company, D & C Construction Company, Inc. of Rockland won the competition for contract 2. But April 28 Town Manager Mark Haddad notified him the bid was rejected because the job was going to be postponed. The sewer commissioners then posted a second letter to Peterson saying the contract was still valid.

Tuesday, Haddad said he had a legal opinion on the matter. Town counsel ruled the Town Manager, not the sewer commission, had the authority to stop the job. Tuesday, the selectmen re-voted the contract 2 question but only to allow selectwoman Diane Sullivan to recuse herself. She lives in the contract 2 area and said it would be a conflict of interest for her to vote on a question that impacted homeowners there.

The second vote was 4-0-1 with Sullivan abstaining.

In a related matter, CEES is planning a symposium on the town's wastewater treatment plans at 7:30 p.m., May 27 in the high school auditorium. CEES hopes to secure sewers for the Little Harbor area which is currently not included in the north or central Cohasset sewer projects.

Lids chief knows how to spot trends

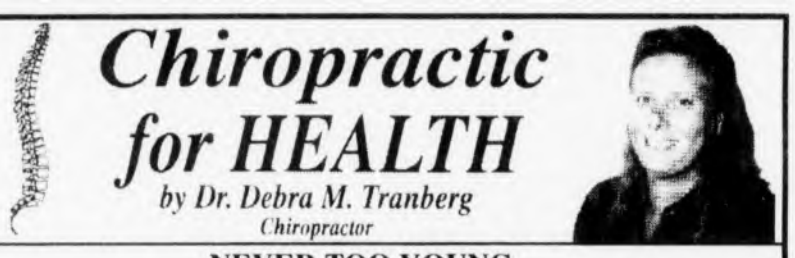
sible Dream fans grinding their teeth two months before the all-star break. Moreover, it is a trend, not a fad, according to Kuchinski who built her career on learning to spot the pacesetters.

She started her career at Polaroid. After seven years there, she moved over to The Limited where she took charge of their subsidiary Mast Industries. The job took her around the world to tag the "hot" items people wanted. Later at Reebok, she became vice-president of manufacturing for apparel before taking charge of the Weebok children's products. The experience made her adept at zoning in on the products people want to buy. Casual hats rank at roughly the top of the chart, she said.



"The market is booming," she said. The "core consumer" buys on average 12 hats a year. That is almost one for every team in the American League, so these may not be the same people that watch baseball. But whoever they are, they are buying all kids of casual hats, not just baseball caps. Bucket hats also got hot this year. People are even buying visors. The business is so brisk it will not really matter if the home team does not clinch the pennant again this year. Kuchinski said Lids is going to have a good year, no matter how the Red Sox play.

"This is a year round business," she said. "The Red Sox might help sales in the Boston area. People love a winner, and they love their teams." But she also said the Lids' hats are Lids "exclusives." The design belongs to the company.

Lids was started by Ben Fischman and Doug Karp. Both have "families in the mall business" run by New England Development. They tried out the concept with a kiosk style operation in the Atrium Mall in Chestnut Hill. Two years later, Lids was growing with eight stores and venture capital money to seed more.

Kuchinski was recruited from her management post at Reebok to become the Lids president and chief operating officer. She sees the potential for 1,500 stores someday. She called the growth explosive and said the operation holds all the "keys to success—a great concept, the financial base to grow fast and an exploding customer base." Best of all, she enjoys the business.

"You want to do something that excites you," she said. "Whatever it is, you should follow your talent. You shouldn't be chasing the dollar. You should be following your dreams." Kuchinski lives in Cohasset with her husband Hank and three children.

AROUND TOWN

CERTIFIED ARBORIST

Gary Barrow of Cohasset recently demonstrated professional competency by successfully completing the Certified Arborist examinations administered through the International Society of Arboriculture (ISA) and the New England Chapter of the ISA. The purpose of this program is to improve the level of knowledge and standard of practice within the tree care profession. It is designed to assist the public in identifying those professionals in arboriculture who have demonstrated, through a professionally developed examination and education program, a thorough knowledge of tree care practice. The ISA program tests and certifies an individual's knowledge in the field of arboriculture. So, now you know whom to call with any problems or questions about the trees on your property, Gary really "knows his stuff!" Gary will take good care of your treasured trees — not only that; he is a real nice guy.

LOCAL ARTISTS SHINE

Here's something we can be proud of! Works by Susan DeMichele, JoAnne Chittick, Tom Lucas and Claffy Williams were selected by jury to be included in the Arts Around Boston '98 Exhibit at Bradford College in Haverhill.

Sixty-six artists from numerous towns in the Boston area were chosen for the group show, held at the Laura Knott Gallery (March 29-April 24). This annual exhibit, which is sponsored by Pleiades Publishing, Inc., is organized to showcase the variety and quality of art produced by area artists and to give viewers the opportunity to see works of both emerging and established artists; included in the show was a pastel ("Blue Snow") by Susan, JoAnne's watercolor "On the Fringe," an oil painting ("Europa and the Bull") by Tom, and "Moon Struck," a print by Claffy.

A WONDERFUL LADY

A beautiful Memorial Service was held April 25 for Marion C. Moulton, a wonderful lady whom many of you remember well — she was a long-standing member of our community and the Beechwood Congregational United Church of Christ. Many former residents were in town for the service; Bud and Gail Huston and their family, the Stuart Sargent family (remember John Sargent, the famous CHS basketball player who scored 1,000 points? He is now in his 40s, with a little all-star of his own!) — the list goes on, and they all had one thing in common, they loved seeing Cohasset again!

NEWS FROM ALASKA

Received a nice note from Maureen O'Leary recently, you'll never guess where she, and her sister Liz, are — Juneau, Alaska! And do they love it! Maureen is working for a non-profit group doing trail-work in Southeast Alaska. Her group teaches building, job skills, training, wilderness survival and coping skills. She loves trail-work, and thrives on being in touch with kids. Maureen is "addicted to the overwhelming beauty there, not to mention the fresh halibut, king crab, salmon, trout, shrimp and scallops."

She and Liz love seeing the eagles, seals, whales, bears, marmots, otters — they are everywhere! They both say hello to everyone, and send their love! So, if you are headed to Alaska, there are two built-in tour guides for you!

BOB GOYETTE WILL BE MISSED

Everyone (and we mean everyone) remembers Bob Goyette, who recently passed away after fighting the good fight against cancer! Bob was a wonderful man, full of compassion, loyalty and love. Bob adored his family, his friends and children of every age — he helped numerous people in his lifetime, and helped turn many lives around! He was a fine man, and those of us whose lives he touched were truly blessed! Bob's family has set up a scholarship in his name, to be issued annually to a Cohasset High graduate. It will be the Robert A. Goyette Scholarship, and whoever receives it will shine with pride! If you wish to contribute to this scholarship, send your donation to: Robert A. Goyette Scholarship Fund, c/o Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank, 48 South Main St., Cohasset, 02025. It is a meaningful way to keep a grand man's memory alive, and one that will always keep him with the youth of our town!

Stamp out hunger

For most of us times are good. A look around our affluent town on a beautiful spring day and it's hard to believe that all is not well with the world.

Green lawns and flower beds frame our homes whose values continue to soar.

Our high school seniors are making their college decisions - many of whom are opting to further their education at expensive private institutions.

And in our driveways and garages sit high-priced sport utility vehicles which have become the transportation of choice for a lot of us.

It makes you wonder why Cohasset needs a food pantry, doesn't it?

But the hard facts are that about 25 local families are helped by the Cohasset Food Pantry every month.

Since its inception five years ago, more than 100 different families have found help at the food pantry.

And Cohasset is not unique. According to a recent Tufts University study, one in 11 or more than 1/2 million people in Massachusetts are at risk of being hungry.

Here's how we can help.

Our local letter carriers are taking part in a national food drive on Saturday in conjunction with the National Association of Letter Carriers. They will be collecting the non-perishable food items and groceries that you leave out by your mailbox.

All of the items will be donated to the Cohasset Food Pantry at the Second Congregational Church.

Food Pantry coordinator Margie Steele says the post office food drive helps supply the pantry for the entire summer.

She points out that unlike during the holiday season — needy families are not always on our minds as the summer season approaches.

"It's tremendous and keeps us supplied through to August," she says.

Mrs. Steele says while everything is appreciated, the pantry could use cereal, laundry detergent, household goods, personal products, fruit juices, crackers and snacks for kids.

Cohasset Postmaster Francine Winters says the post office is glad to help out.

"It's a worthwhile effort to help needy families and an excellent opportunity to strengthen the relationship we have with the community," she says.

If we all pitch in, collectively we can really make a difference.

Last year, letter carriers across the country picked up 73 million tons of food, the largest one-day collection in the nation's history.

It's a shame that anyone in our country or our town has to go to bed hungry.

So please "Help Stamp Out Hunger" by putting a few non-perishable food items or groceries out by your mailbox on Saturday.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No special town meeting needed

This is in response to the April 30 Mariner editorial.

TO THE EDITOR:

If you think that writing about the North Cohasset sewer project is a nightmare, you should be living it!

For more than two years, I have attended every posted Sewer Commission meeting; whether it be their regularly scheduled meeting at 4, 6 p.m., 11:45 a.m. Saturday of a Memorial Day weekend, or the latest, 8 a.m. Saturday at the end of school spring vacation.

It is not easy to follow the agenda of this commission, but I can tell you without a doubt, the voters who raised their cards opposing Article 18 at the Annual Town Meeting, knew, unequivocally, what they were voting.

I take issue with your comment: "... it's no wonder that Article 18 failed, even though all it would have done was to appropriate the money to be paid back entirely by users."

This translates into spending $9.3 million to sewer 277 homes — which includes 84 Type A Simplex Grinder Pumps and two Type B Simplex Grinder Pumps. We are not building a sewer treatment plant! This is too much money for this project.

The Board of Selectmen recommended against this Article, as did the Advisory Board.

If Article 18 had passed and the $2.7 million increase was voted at the ballot the following week, the 277 homeowners in North Cohasset would have an additional cost of more than $10,000, bringing the total cost of this project to each of us at $35,000.

The Sewer Commission should not ask for a Special Town Meeting, but follow the mandate of the voters, and the vote of the Board of Selectmen taken April 13. Proceed with Contract I and rebid Contracts II, III and IV with the Central/Hillside in August.

Good news for water rate payers

TO THE EDITOR:

The Governor's recent approval of legislation to create a Drinking Water State Revolving Fund is cause for Massachusetts American Water Company customers to celebrate. Significant reduction in water bills will soon occur.

Shortly after taking office in 1995, I began looking for ways to help the residents of Hingham to offset the exorbitantly high water rates caused by the revised federal drinking water standards. While nobody was prepared for the 155 percent rate increase that accompanied the opening of Mass American's $40 million plant, every resident should take time to thank those who participated in the Hingham water rate protest at the State House. It was your many voices in protest that got the attention of the Governor and Legislative Leadership—you made sure I was heard when fighting to lower the cost of water in Hingham.

Fortunately, the language that I drafted to make sure that Hingham would be included in this program was adopted. Without the compelling State House testimony of selectman Iris Daigle and town administrator Charles Cristello, it would have been impossible for me to persuade my colleagues to include Hingham for relief under this program. Their time and efforts should be applauded by all customers of the Massachusetts American Water Company.

There are others to thank, like Representative Mary Jeannette Murray, who helped guide this proposal through the House. But not to be forgotten is Edward Teague of the Massachusetts Water Pollution Abatement and Mass American President Jim Perry who also deserve credit for their technical assistance and support.

We have been successful in our efforts. Many thanks to all.

Kids and drugs:
The courage to lovingly confront

As parents when concerned about substance abuse, we need to explain our concerns and see how the child responds. Does the conversation get more open, or shut down?

D&A COMMITTEE

LILLIAN HELEN ADLER

Adolescents, like 4-year-olds, really believe that they can make something true by wishing it were true. They can deny a teenage pregnancy long after their body screams at them with changes. They can convince themselves that one beer is not really drinking. They can reassure themselves that someone else's joint is not their drug use. Tell them your concern is not what the behavior is called, but what substance is entering their precious bodies.

While always keeping the conversation going, be prepared to go to the mat. We have the right to be wrong, especially with regard to worry about our kids. Most often, when parents are worried, it's for a good reason, even when their guesses are wrong. There are ways to get hard data, but it requires some confidence.

Our children live in our homes. We are responsible for everything in our homes including our child's room, possessions, closets and to some extent their bodies. With respect for their individuality and their age, we have a right to know what is in all of them. It's nice to announce that we are searching, but we don't need permission to do so, just courage.

"Please don't look there!" they may shriek. But we must. If we uncover a father's day gift and ruin a surprise, it's a small price to pay for doing what must be done to uncover a serious problem or reestablish a failing trust. If we uncover things that need explanations, we must ask for them. If they make no sense to us, we must share that. Why are there so many bank withdrawals? Why do they have this pipe in their desk drawer? Why are there so many missed homework assignments the last month? Hard, hard questions for us to ask, for our kids to answer. Resist answering these questions for them.

In fact, we can call on technology to help us. There are tests, that with great accuracy can answer some of the questions we have. Alcohol use will cause changes anyone can easily detect. The array of drugs available on the streets will produce a variety of behavioral responses from increased activity, (ICE, speed, amphetamines), heightened sensitivity, euphoria or hallucinations (LSD, mushrooms, mescaline) or a loss of inhibitions or a sedated or mellow effect (marijuana, sedatives or downers, alcohol). But sometimes we parents are the last to notice them, or to accept the true meaning of them. Blood and urine tests that can detect alcohol and all kinds of substances, are available at hospital emergency rooms when indicated, and a parent's worry is an indication. Breathalyzers are done by the police department and can also detect alcohol in the system. Most drugs will be present in the urine for more than 24 hours, and cannabis (marijuana) can be present for up to four weeks for chronic users.

Over-the-counter kits for testing hair are available at drug stores and will detect the presence of more than 20 substances in a person's body for up to 90 days. While this can be useful to a parent, doing such a test without the child's knowledge contributes to the breakdown of communication. It's better to let the child know that this option exists, and you may use it at any time, and that their cooperation isn't essential for the testing, since all you need is a snip of hair.

It takes a lot of courage for a parent of a child who is not seriously impaired to ask for a toxicity screen from their pediatrician or medical facility, but it is an option, and most doctors will appreciate your concern and honor your wish, even if they don't think it's clinically indicated. What helps is to tell your child ahead of time that it is happening, and that, even though they may swear that they haven't ever even been offered drugs, you need it for your own peace of mind. If you suspect the child is concerned about testing positive, you might say you'll give a grace period of two to three weeks so they can clean out their system. Sometimes, the lingering possibility of random tests and subsequent detection is enough to help a child ward off peer pressure to experiment with substances. Sometimes a child will let himself test positively to communicate how difficult it is for him to stay drug free. A positive test is an opportunity to initiate some individual or family counseling, some new limits, some changes in peer groups or activities that have been contributing in some way to drug use. Your credibility is only enhanced if you actually do have a toxicity or drug screen at some point, if you said that you will.

Drug use prevention is not as easy as the prevention of German measles or mumps. For those troubles, a regular schedule of immunizations will protect your child nicely. Substance abuse requires ongoing vigilance, and the courage to have conversations with your child about things you wish just didn't exist in their world. Changes in grades, friends, behavior, interests etc. have causes, and if you continue an ongoing conversation with your kids about their world, you may have a good idea why they are happening. The absence of any explanation that makes sense to you warrants further investigation. It is not our kids whom we indict when we explore the possibility of their drug use, but our society that allows drug abuse by children to be such a rampant problem in our community.

Finally, take the conversation a step farther. Talk to other parents. Gather around you fellow parents and talk about the problem of drug use in our community. Share your thoughts on summer curfews, supervision of parties, worrisome events. See if there is any agreement on rules and limits in your homes.

It is in the quiet silence of closed doors and closed mouths that an epidemic like drugs can grow and spread. Conversation can kill it. Start talking .

Dismayed over testing of special needs students

Despite many objections by professionals, in the next several weeks special needs children will be subjected to a series of tests that can only result in their total frustration. As a special education teacher with more than 17 years of experience, I have never encountered a situation as cruel and as potentially damaging as the hours of testing to which these children are being subjected.

MY VIEW

LAURA RICKESTON DOHERTY

In order to enter a 766 program, these children have already been tested separately by both a teacher and by a school psychologist. A meeting must have been held with their parents and other concerned staff members. Then, the parents are presented with an educational plan for their child which, if approved, is signed by them and implemented.

The students who are sent to my class function at least two to four grade levels below that expected for their chronological age. And yet, they are being subjected to taking on level tests. This means, that a 12-year-old who only recently learned the alphabet and reads at a beginning first-grade level is being required to take a fifth-grade test.

The students who are sent to my class function at least two to four grade levels below that expected for their chronological age. And yet, they are being subjected to taking on level tests. This means, that a 12-year-old who only recently learned the alphabet and reads at a beginning first-grade level is being required to take a fifth-grade test.

Many of my colleagues and I have expressed our dismay at this situation but have been told that no one is exempt. It is difficult to understand this, since any educational plan I have ever developed has contained exemptions and/or modifications for each subject according to individual needs. These plans are previewed and signed by the student's parents. They are, I have been told, legal documents and must be followed.

Fourth-grade special needs students are most affected because they are required to undergo not only the Stanford Achievement Tests, but also the new M.C.A.S. Test. This represents at least 15 hours of testing on a level at which they cannot possibly succeed.

During one session, one student asked his teacher why she was torturing him. In another class, two students cried.

And, the students aren't the only ones frustrated. Because special education students are often assigned to classes according to seat availability rather than level of learning, their teachers often teach as many as two to four grades. This results in having to administer as many different tests and creates a very distracting environment. Not exactly an ideal testing situation.

The loss of teaching time is another major objection. At-risk learners need every minute available to them if they are to succeed in school.

One of the arguments by proponents of these tests is civil rights requirements. There is not a teacher I know who would not agree with equal rights for all. But these rights are upheld in each and every educational plan. And, if provisions have been made for a student to be tested at his functioning level, their right to learn is being violated when so much class time is spent on tests which are as many as four levels too high.

HEALTH NOTES

Groundwater plumes are common

As a homeowner, you own some things on your property you may not know about. One of these is a groundwater plume. There's at least one plume on every piece of property in Cohasset.

Groundwater plumes come in all sizes and descriptions and serve a variety of purposes. They carry rainwater from roof gutters, they carry, and purify, septic wastes. A spring is just the surface manifestation of a groundwater plume.

Water is carried in plumes in a different manner from the way it is carried in a river or brook. First, it's slower, much slower, sometimes inches per day, also, the water in the plume doesn't mix with naturally occurring water (usually rainwater) in the water table. The extent of plumes can be mapped as is now being done with the toxic plume emanating from a Nike site on Cape Cod. There, the plume is shown on the surface by orange oil drums which are moved every day.

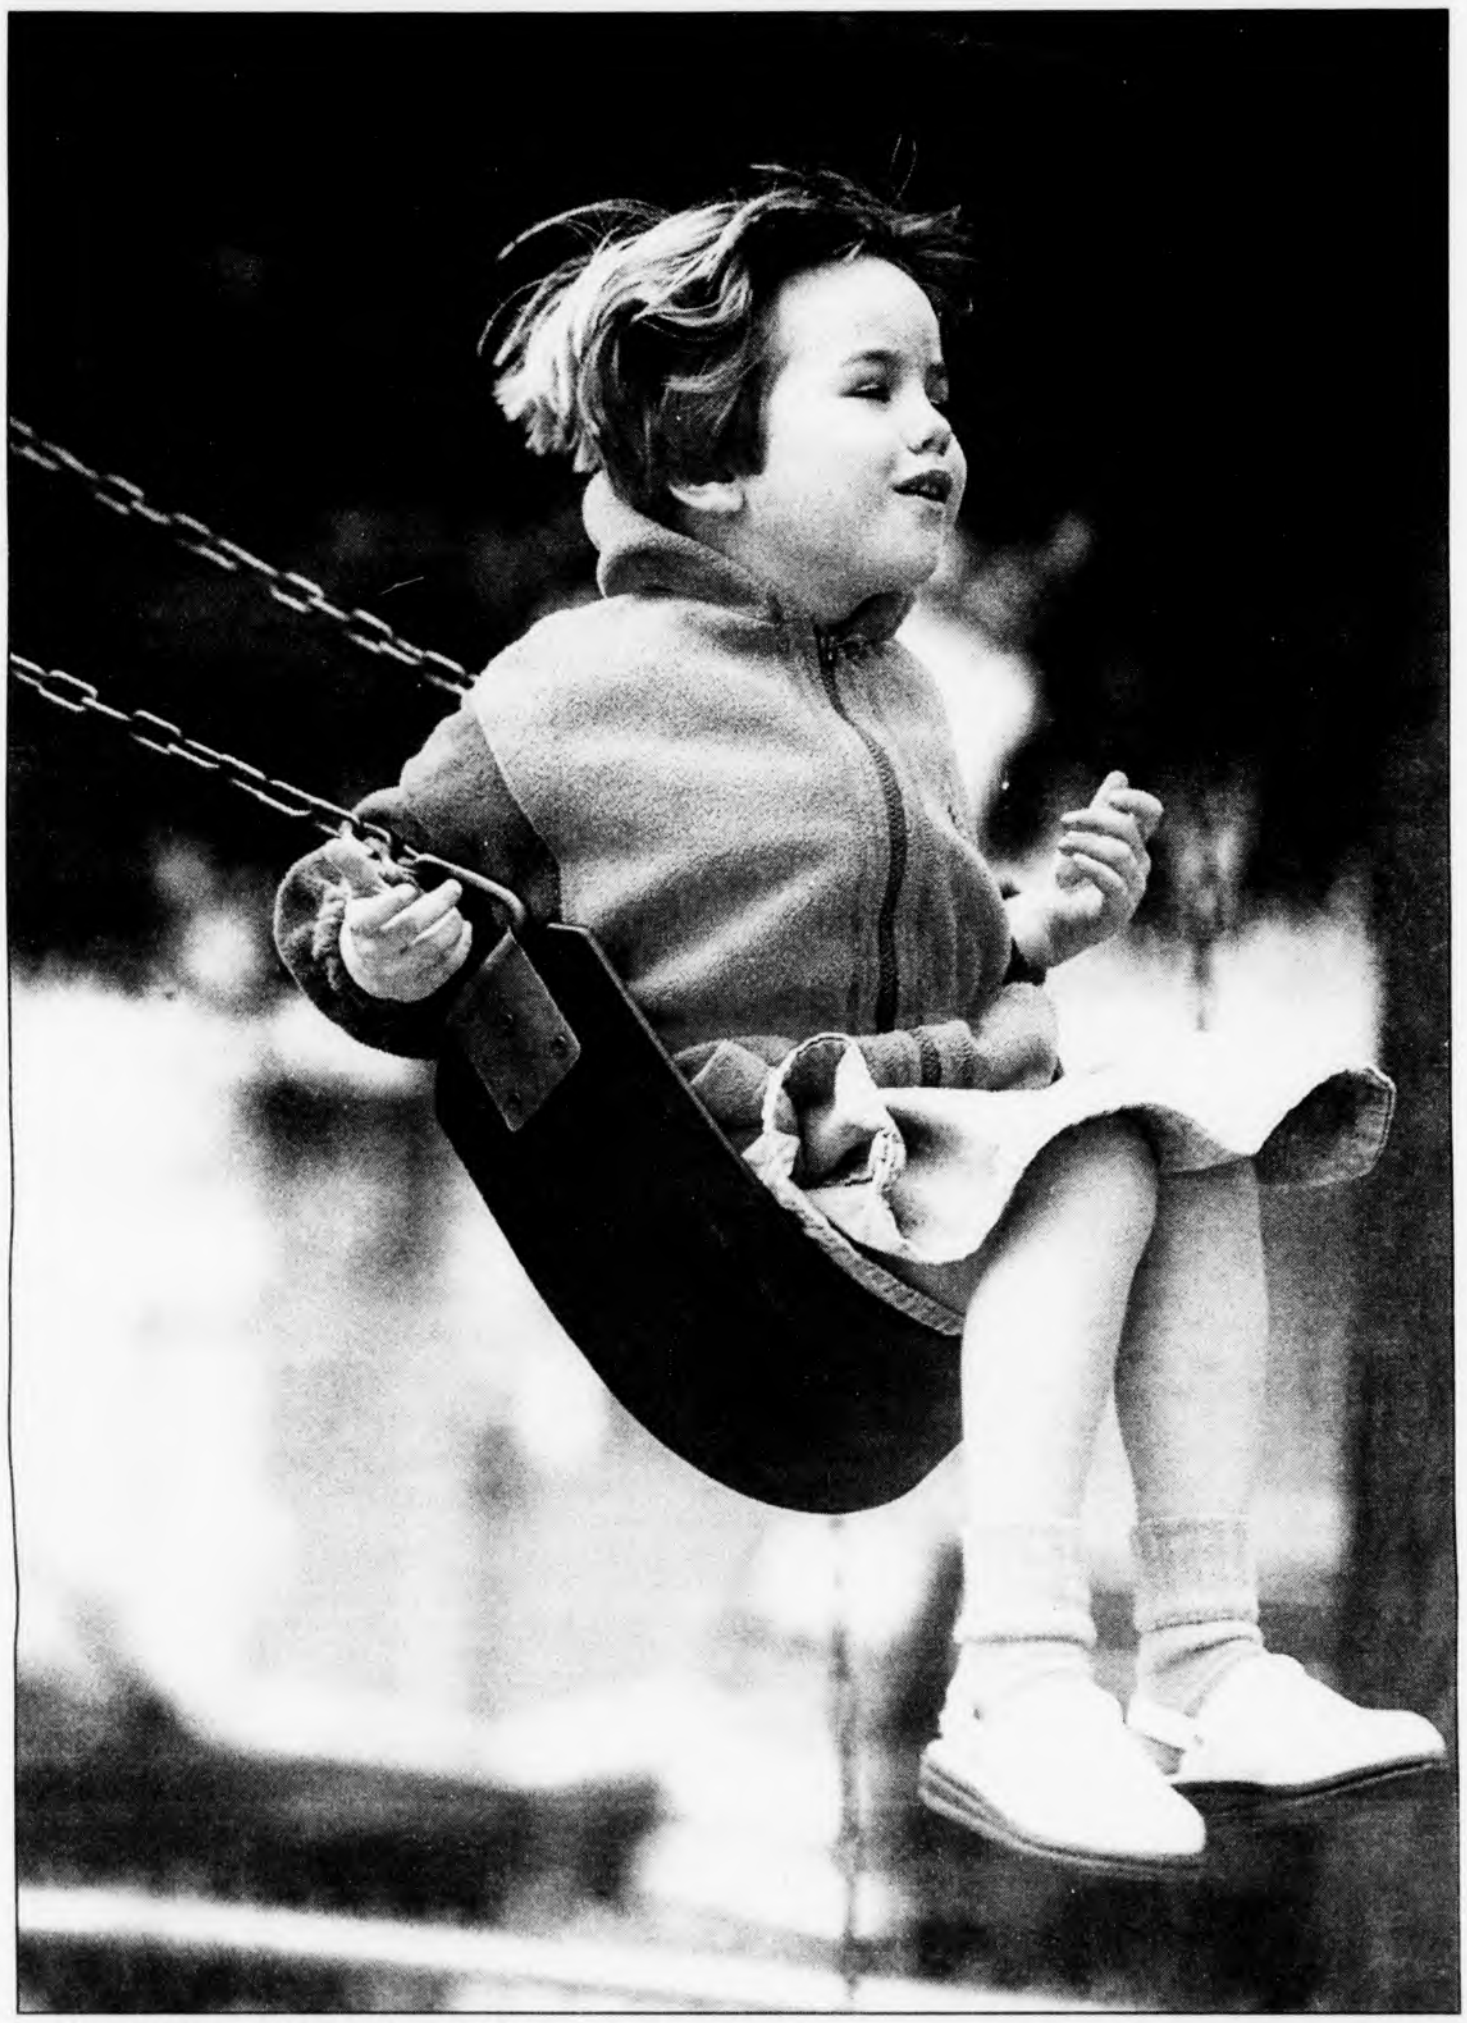
Important to a homeowner is the plume from the leaching field in the septic system. It radiates from the system in the general direction of the slope of the land. In a properly operating septic system the plume contains clear fresh water spoiled only by contaminants leaching down from the soil surface. If contaminants like gasoline or motor oil are flushed through the septic system, the biomat which aerates and transforms the septic wastes is destroyed, the septic system can no longer process the wastewater from a home, and the plume is contaminated. If the septic system is not operating properly, the plume can contain harmful viruses and pathogens like hepatitis and e-coli.

The Cohasset Heights landfill

The Cohasset Heights landfill has been a controversy in town for years. It is universally seen as a detriment to Cohasset although it has been reported that the DEP would declare that the landfill is one of the best-run in the state. The problem is that in the exchange of invective and emotion, the facts tend to get diffused. The major question is whether, in the future, leachate from the landfill will pollute our water supply. The question is whether any of the plume flows south from the divide toward the lower wetland, the source of water for Brass Kettle Brook, headwaters for Lily Pond. It's clear, that most of it is on the north side of the water surface divide which flows to Hingham's great swamp, and eventually to the Weir River. The problem is compounded by the fact that the Mass. Highway Department has a salt storage on 3A the plume from which is near the CHL plume and carrying salt to the same general area.

Maps from dozens of studies of the landfill show monitoring points all over, and judgments about them by unbiased experts tend to indicate that the threat is remote, distant and minimal. For a threat to our water supply, that, of course, isn't good enough. So we should continue to gather information until the question of risk to our water and what can be done about it is answered. If the threat exists, all agree, we should close the landfill.

The Board of Health will discuss in its May 12 meeting whether to accept the plan to remove some illegally placed fill. A consensus of knowledgeable experts say this doesn't make sense, since it is capped and lined as in the rest of the landfill.



It appears that regardless of any decision, the CHL will continue its defense of its right to operate until it is proved unequivocally that Lily Pond is threatened. Until that happens, the town has to decide whether it wants a well-managed landfill in town or to continue to litigate until the courts resolve the problem.

Grant status

A part of the grant being requested from the state DEP by the Board of Health will cover a study prepared and monitored by John McNabb, water commissioner, to take measurements to assess potential threats to the water supply from CHL and other sources of potential pollution.

Shared sewer, drainage costs irk long-time resident

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

David and Frances Burnham are on a campaign to get the town to help them with devastating drainage problems at their Newtonville Road home. The Burnham's front yard frequently sits under a temporary lake after every rainstorm. The board of health has declared the Burnham's property and three adjacent properties public health hazards because of raw sewage bubbling up through the ground from failed septic systems. And while the town has included the Newtonville homes in the Central Cohasset sewer project, it has declined to help the Burnham's with their drainage problems. The Burnham's feel that the town is not being fair.

But there is another side to this story. Professor John Zotos, 66, a resident of Old Coach Lane, read about the Burnham's plight in last week's Mariner and became angrier and angrier as he read the article. Zotos was incensed that the Burnham's want to use public taxes to fix their private property problems. Zotos was especially angry because he spent $30,000 of his own money in 1990 fixing a failed septic problem on his property. The town never offered him a penny and he knew that it was up to him to pay for the repairs.

Zotos is a retired Professor Emeritus of Mechanical Engineering, and in love with Cohasset. But Zotos has grown tired of residents and residents' groups asking the town to share in their sewer costs. Now, with residents looking for town funding for drainage problems and septic failures on private properties, Zotos believes someone has to say," enough."

"The people near Strait's Pond want the town to pay for their sewer and hook-ups," Zotos said. "Here they are crucifying us at town meeting with their 50-50 funding schemes, but why should we as taxpayers give in to the people at Strait's Pond. When they bought their property, they knew they had septic systems."

Zotos said he knew when he bought his house in the early 1960s that he would have to replace the septic system. And in 1965, that's just what he had to do. Ten years later, Zotos had to replace the leaching field again. And then in 1990 he had to replace the entire front yard and install a new system that complied with Title V regulations. Zotos said he has spent about $40,000 repairing his septic problems since he bought the house.

"All that money came out of my pockets," Zotos said. "I didn't have $30,000 in 1990 and I had to take out a second mortgage the house. No one from the town said 'Here John, here's some money to help you'."

Zotos said he's not stingy and with a $5,500 per year tax bill, he's certainly paying his fair share of the tax bill. Zotos said he sent several children through the Cohasset school system and he is proud that his tax money can educate a new generation of young people.

"I benefited from the town, which educated my children, and I believe I still have a responsibility to maintain strong schools," Zotos said. "But we also need to provide for our elderly. I'm in a wheelchair and I just love the Tuesday luncheons. We have an excellent council on aging."

Many elderly residents in town are on fixed incomes and can't afford to pay higher tax rates for other people's sewer problems, Zotos said.

Zotos said the town can't pay for everything, and feels that it's time for residents with septic, sewer and drainage problems to get used to the idea of paying for the problems on their private property.

"I don't think the first 50-50 project should have been passed," Zotos said. "But a house is sacred and the responsibility of the citizen who owns it. It's not up to the town to accept this obligation of paying the sewer bills of other people."

Zotos is also angered by people complaining about their sewer and drainage costs yet failing to acknowledge the windfall they've received from soaring property values in town.

"I fell in love with the town the first time I came here to go to the Music Circus and saw the rocky beaches," Zotos said. "If people can't afford to live here and pay for their problems with their property, that's too bad. We need a population of various incomes, but we can't pay for private drainage and sewage problems."

Board wants sewer now for Newtonville

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis may have ruled that the board of health cannot force the sewer commission to connect four homes on Newtonville Road to the sewer system. And the sewer commission may be insistent that it will determine when those four homes will be connected. But none of that will stop the health board from trying to get the sewer commission to connect those four homes to sewer pipes immediately.

Last January the health board declared the four homes public health emergencies because raw sewage was percolating up through the ground from failed septic systems. Town meeting agreed to let the four homes connect into the Central Cohasset project, but that could take more than a year. Meanwhile, the public health emergency remains. The health board may force homeowners to install tight tanks, sealed sewage collection tanks that require frequent pumping, until the sewer problems are resolved.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said it could take months to receive approval from DEP to install tight tanks on the four properties. He insisted that the sewer commission could connect those four homes to the existing system right now rather than waiting for the completion of the Central Cohasset project.

"The sewer commission already has the capacity allocated for these homes out of the extra capacity granted by the state," Ulmer said. "Those homes could be connected immediately. It just doesn't make sense to delay connecting four homes with imminent health emergencies."

Ulmer said the health board has invited the sewer commission to its next meeting. If the sewer commissioners attend, the owners of the Newtonville Road homes will also be invited to attend. If the sewer commissioners decide not to attend, the health board members plan to attend the next sewer commission meeting.

Cohasset's Peter Roy buys Chart House

New England 'classics' to top menu

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The ink could be on the deed to the Chart House restaurant on Border Street within the week, according to the lawyer for Peter Roy. Roy, who is in Toronto on a business trip, is buying the harborside property for $1.85 million. But the deal was contingent on the successful transfer of food, beverage and Sunday and entertainment licenses. The selectmen May 5 voted to approve the licenses. They must go on to the state for a final OK, however.

Tuesday, Lewis Jackson, vice president of development for the Chart House restaurants, said he expected the transaction to move ahead. Jackson confirmed the price and said the property was under contract.

Erick Stenfors of Hull, currently Roy's private chef, has been named the new manager. A graduate of the Culinary Institute, Stenfors, 26, said the food at Atlantica will be based on "New England classics" but with a newer presentation with lighter, healthier ingredients and seasoning. For instance, in the main dining room, the "more complex food preparations," emphasizing seafood, would be served. Prices would run around $15-$30. In the bar where light meals will be available, Stenfors said oysters on the half shell and shrimp cocktails will be on the menu.

Tuesday, lawyer Charles Humphreys offered a few details about the new establishment to be called Atlantica. Initially, the spot will be open only for dinner, though Roy plans to build up to a lunch menu later. The new restaurant will have "a nautical seacoast theme" though he promised the style would not be reminiscent of a seaside shack. The outside of the restaurant will be improved, but the general layout will probably not change. Humphreys said every seat in the dining room has a view of the harbor, and the new owner did not want to tamper with the seating. He also said the restaurant would keep the John Smith function room and also have another room with a bar for light "affairs." The establishment would probably be open sometime in August, though construction work will take some time.

"The building still needs a substantial amount of work," he said, citing structural problems, a leaking roof and an "antiquated" air conditioning system. The total seating capacity at the restaurant is 610. To keep it profitable, Humphreys said the restaurant would depend on holding functions, such as weddings.

"Peter's very enthusiastic about it," he said. "He looks at it as a business. But he also looks at it as a very important property he can add to the town. Cohasset needs a good restaurant." Roy also owns Kimballs By the Sea. He is executive vice-president of Intercontinental Development Corp. in Hingham.

Superintendent search narrowed to 11 candidates

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Eleven candidates survived the first cut in the search for a new schools superintendent. Deer Hill School principal Paul Callahan is one of them. The names of the others, all outsiders, will not be announced because one demanded confidentiality.

The new school chief will replace Stephen Hart. He is retiring this August, and the search committee formed to find his replacement has moved ahead on a fast track. The committee held its first meeting April 30. It elected then to keep the names of 10 semi-finalists a secret.

Callahan's name had been made public earlier.

The board acted on advice of their consultant James Hardy of the state association of school committees. Hardy reported three of the candidates requested confidentiality, though only one stated positively he would withdraw his name from consideration if the search committee went public with their names. He urged the board to keep the names secret and the interviews behind closed doors or risk losing "a third of your pool of candidates."

In all, 42 candidates applied for the post which will pay between $90,000-$105,000 annually. Hardy was hired to screen the applications and come up with a list of 10. Callahan, the only insider in the group, was guaranteed of an interview under rules the school board established to encourage people already in the Cohasset school district to apply for the top post. At least three of the other semi-finalists currently hold the top posts in other school districts, according to statements Hardy made April 30. But none of the other 10 semi-finalists will be named and no more details about them provided.

Though seven semi-finalists did not ask for confidentiality, Hardy said the board should be consistent since claims might later be raised about unfairness, although Callahan's name had already been put out.

The school board is expected to name between three and five finalists for the post at their May 21 meeting, search committee Chairwoman Maureen Jerz said Tuesday. The names of the candidates will be announced then, and the rest of the interviews will be held in public.

Besides Jerz, the other members of the search committee are school administrators Curtis Collins and Marilee Cantelmo, teachers Fran Cronin and Genevieve Brown, parents Jane Pescatore and Michael Hurley, student Jamie Butman and at-large citizens Roger Whitley and Midge

Recreation center plan may be scaled down

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Scituate may build a recreation complex in the near future, but it might not be as grandiose as planners had envisioned.

The estimated $10 million, 100,000-square-foot facility that the Citizens' Recreation Center Action Group (CRAG) wanted to build on Route 3A will likely be scaled back to a $6 million to $8 million, 50,000 to 80,000-square-foot plan, said CRAG founder Ralph Crossen.

"It's more modest than the dream version," he said.

CRAG's original plan included a regulation size indoor swimming pool, "aqua-leisure" center with hot tubs, water falls and slides, and an indoor hockey rink on a 20-acre parcel of town-owned land known as the Ellis Estate on Country.

Those components will still be the focus of the project, although their size may have to be reduced, Crossen said.

"I'm hoping they're successful. It would be a great asset to the area," said Joe McElroy, a school committee member who has been following Scituate's progress with the project closely.

McElroy had been involved with a proposal — which is on hold —to enclose the Cohasset Swim Center off Sohier Street and make it a year-round facility.

"There's no question in my mind that there's a need for a pool and I strongly believe that the Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell, Hull area can support a year-round pool," he said.

CRAG hopes to include in the plan a gymnasium, a health club, a day care center, offices for the town's recreation department and possibly an indoor soccer/lacrosse facility. Athletic fields for baseball, soccer and football surrounding the complex are also part of the proposal.

CRAG proposes to pay for the construction and operation of the recreation center at no cost to Scituate taxpayers through user fees.

Consultants Ken Ballard and Jeff King of Ballard, King and Associates in Aurora, Co. visited Scituate last month. They gathered as much information as possible about recreation needs in town and facilities in surrounding communities to measure the financial feasibility of building a recreation complex in Scituate.

The consultants have given CRAG the green light to hire an architect to draw up plans and specifications for the project but has not yet released its final analysis of the feasibility study. A draft of their findings is expected by Thursday, Crossen said.

The study consisted of two sections: the community's needs and what the community can afford, Crossen explained.

The first section determined that the community's needs for recreational facilities are exhaustive.

"This community has nothing," said Crossen. "There is no public pool for 20 miles and there are no adequate sports facilities for anything in the area. If we built everything we needed, there's no way we could have afforded it without adding more funds to the equation."

Crossen said the next phase of the project entails the consultants sitting down with the architect and designing the facility according to CRAG's budget. Once the plans are finished, CRAG will take its final proposal to town meeting, he said.

The recreation group, comprised of experts in the various fields associated with this type of project, has been working on the plan since January. CRAG formed to try to create alternatives for Scituate's youth who have very little in the form of recreation at their disposal.

Dispute over open meeting law drags on

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A tempest is still churning over the Mariner's April 23 story about three selectmen who turned up unexpectedly at the April 9 school committee meeting. Selectman Merle Brown demanded an apology from the newspaper at the board's April 27 meeting. At the May 5 meeting, it was selectman Thomas Callahan's turn to sound off. He was out of town on vacation and missed the previous meeting when Brown went on the air. Tuesday Callahan left no doubt he also wanted an apology. He deemed the story "divisive" and bashed the newspaper for raising a question about the open meetings law.

The item noted the three board members, Merle Brown, Ronnie McMorris and Thomas Callahan, made up a quorum of selectmen, although they apparently did not all expect to see each other at the meeting. Though boards can hold joint meetings, the public is supposed to get advance word about them through a posting. There was no advertisement a majority of the selectmen would be at the school board meeting April 9, and the selectmen were not on the agenda. The story noted Town Manager Mark Haddad previously said he did not think such a notice would be necessary.

Callahan made his comments after Haddad showed a letter from the Norfolk County District Attorney's office clarifying the rules about open meetings. The letter (requested by Mariner editor Mary Ford) agreed the two boards did not each have to post two separate meetings notices about a joint meeting. But the one notice must indicate both boards would be in attendance. Ford requested the D.A.'s opinion after Haddad said the question ought to be cleared up. The newspaper did not ask the D.A. to find the selectmen in violation of the open meetings law.

Tuesday, Haddad said he thought it would still be OK not to post the names of both boards as long as both boards were on the agenda and the agenda was posted under the meeting notice. That is the way he handled the joint meeting Tuesday between the selectmen and the Osgood School Reuse Committee.

"I just think it is absurd. The Mariner's position is ridiculous."
SELECTMAN TOM CALLAHAN

"This is a perfect example," he said. The board has now instructed him to send the D.A. another letter to find out what happens if the board sends a quorum to another board's meeting "accidentally." The selectmen want to know if one will have to leave the meeting or if they are free to gather "accidentally" at other board meetings. In the meantime, Callahan said he planned to continue going to meetings of other boards.

"I just think it is absurd. The Mariner's position is ridiculous," he said and vowed he was not going to "give up" his rights to go to board meetings because he is an elected official.

"Are we supposed to post it when we bring our kids to Little League?" he said. Under the open meetings law, the public is supposed to have 48 hours advance notice when a board holds a meeting. The purpose of the law is to allow the public to witness government proceedings and participate in them. It is also meant to prevent officials from conducting the public business in secret unless there are specific reasons why the meeting should be confidential. A majority of the board members, dubbed a "quorum," constitutes a meeting, but the law does not apply to social occasions unless the officials use the occasion as a pretext to discuss town business.

Brown, who was reached in a telephone interview after the April 9 session, said he attended the school board meeting to follow up on a campaign promise. Attempts to reach the two other board members did not succeed before the newspaper's deadline. McMorris did not return a telephone call to the Mariner. Callahan was out of town on vacation though he did return the call two days after the paper went to press.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Red Sox star tops collectors card wish list

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Every hobby collector will tell you that right now the biggest things on the market are those cute and cuddly pieces of felt with those oh-so-perky names and the baseball player with the largest nasal region this side if Larry Bird.

A quick prediction- The first person who comes out with a Nomar Garciaparra Beanie Baby can write their own check to prosperity.

More than 20 trading card and memorabilia collectors from all around the area converged on the Independence Mall in Kingston over the weekend to show off their pride and joy and maybe make a good deal on rookie card or two.

One of the anchors at the show was Carl DiMaggio, owner and proprietor DiMaggio's Sports Cards and Memorabilia , which has had a location in the mall for the last 18 months.

More than Mo Vaughn or even Drew Bledsoe right now, DiMaggio said that serious collectors and kids alike are trying to scoop up as many of Garciaparra's cards that they can get their hands on.

Not just a short-time fad such as a "Super" Joe Charbeneau or any other one hit wonder you may see in any given year, the 1997 American League Rookie of the Year seems to possess the staying power to remain on top for an extended period of time.

"Right now Nomar is pretty much by himself at the top of list," said DiMaggio of the Red Sox sophomore sensation "He's the card that everyone wants to get their hand on. Every kid is chasing him right now."

Garciaparra's 1997 rookie card will run you about $35 at the moment, a solid investment said Steve Smith, the owner of Hyannis Sports Cards.

"Nomar's the man right now," said Smith. "He's hot and I don't see any reason why he won't stay there for a long time to come."

On the other end of the trading card spectrum right now seems to be Chicago White Sox slugger Frank Thomas.

"He was really hot a few years back but has cooled off considerably as of late," said DiMaggio. "The experts were talking about him as the next triple crown winner but he's not been able to pull it off."

Depending on the individual case, off the field actions can have a great impact on the marketing value of a player.

Chances are very good that you won't be able to put that down payment on the house with a Dave Meggett or a Curtis Martin rookie card. But on the other hand, not even a nasty contract dispute or a drunken driving trial has been able to put a dent into the marketability of Mo Vaughn.

"Even after all the problems that he's gone through as of late, the one thing you cannot deny is that the kids love Mo. I don't think that all of his problems have hurt him at all," said DiMaggio.

"Off the field problems can really have an effect on a player's memorabilia consumption very much. People will stay away from the product if a player becomes a problem."

"The thing that has hurt Vaughn more than anything has been the emergence of Nomar," he added. "Garciaparra came along and stole all of Mo's thunder."

Taking a peek in his crystal ball, DiMaggio said two players who will probably be in the most demand in

Get hooked on spring fishing

"If you promise to take your children fishing, consider it as important as buying food, paying your rent/mortgage, or a meeting with your boss. Look at it as an investment in yours family's health and security." (from the Parent's Guide to Hooked on Fishing-Not on Drugs).

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

On slow days fishing and on slow says at the store, the mind tends to wander. The spring fog wafts across the damp parking lot as my mind goes back to earlier times, fishing with my brother. The world of the harbor was an exciting destination for kids like us who sought adventure on our beat-up bikes, fishing poles firmly tied to the crossbar. A peanut butter and apple jelly sandwich safely squashed in the storage bag under the seat, and a quarter for a quart of root beer at the Harbor Liquor store.

As we pedaled along the salty air would begin to fill our nostrils, as well as the faint aroma of dried in the sun mud flats and flowering trees that flourished in every yard on Elm Street. As we rounded the corner at the Cove Manny Mark's gas station and Hugo's Shack loomed into view. Not far behind them the great ship's ventilators that adorned the roof of Kimballs stood guard over the mouth of James Brook.

The road arced long to the left as we pumped past the fire station and along the open causeway by Lawrence Wharf. That was our first stop. Bikes lay askew on the ground as we clambered up the granite block and the cold refreshment of the water bubbler there. Onward past Hugo's, then Silvia's dilapidated pier. Three or four old salts would always be there, passing the time shaded under a bleached umbrella, looking out the channel of their youth. A rusty NO TRESSPASSING sign, nailed to the weather beaten boards by the street, added to the aura of adventure.

Next stop was the cavernous Mill Wharf Marine barn. The dock boy would grudgingly come in and bring out the cardboard tray stashed in the ancient General Electric cooler. Eyes wide we watched him counting out the worms, knowing at any moment he could suffer a ferocious pinch. Quickly, we'd count out meager paper route coins for a half dozen comatose sea worms, mount our trusty bikes and be on our way, over the bridge to Mecca, the Government Island pier.

So many youthful days spent... catching perch, pollock, a rare flounder, ugly sea robins, skates and crabs... scampering over barnacle clad ledges by the falls, gathering someone's cast off squidding line to use as a drop line... collecting periwinkles and mussels for bait, as the sea worms would only make it through the first hour... watching the older kids plunge from the bridge into the rapids... sail boats from the fledgling sailing club tracking to and fro through the crowded moorings... barrels of no-so-sweet redfish forked off the pier wall into the lobster boats below... great bushels of sapphire mackerel swung onto the pier by loud anglers... yes, we learned some new words from those guys swinging at their Schlitz.... and learning about a place to fish called Minot's Light.

Minot's Ledge and many of the other ledges in the area now hold schoolies and rat bass. Reports of mackerel past the H Bouy are coming in now. John Tedeschi took clams, sea worms and mackerel on

ATHLETE OF THE MONTH

Kate Stone

Don't let her sweet and innocent appearance fool you. Get Kate Stone out onto a tennis court and she's as cold-hearted and merciless as they come.

That's seems to be as good a reason as any to choose her as our Athlete of the Month.

Stone, only a sophomore, is in her second year as the top singles player on the Lady Skippers tennis team, who are perfect so far at 4-0.

Stone is perfect as well, going undefeated this season after compiling a 14-2 record last season.

"I've known her since she was 12-years-old and every time you give her a challenge she just rises to the occasion," said her coach Sarah Meehan. "She is just an exceptional player and an even better young lady."

the next few years will come from the world of professional basketball-Kobe Bryant and Tim Duncan.

"Bryant is the one they are talking about as the 'next Michael Jordan', but I think that Duncan may be the one with the overall better tools," he said. "Those are the two guys you can be safe collecting in the next few years."

The collecting business, card trading specifically, has seen its ups and downs over the years. Recovering from the over-saturation that plagued the business in the late-80s, the hobby seems to be on the rise once again.

"There was a time there when it seemed that everyone and their brother had a piece of the business. That seems to have evened out over the years." said DiMaggio.

Besides there being major competition among the collectors, there was also some major battles going on within more than a handful of companies who are now in the trading card business. Where once Topps and Fleer were the unquestioned giants of the business, the industry pie is now being cut in more pieces than ever before.

"There's a lot out there to be had and the card companies corrected that by offering a nice product that although is a little more expensive is a little more limited in nature, which helps to hold the value of the card," DiMaggio explained. "The customer base might be a little bit smaller, but you don;t have as many people in the business who are just trying to make the quick buck."

During the height of the card wars it almost became a hobby exclusively for the older people are young kids were being priced out of the game. Although the days of the 50 cent pack are probably gone forever, the last year or two has seen a return to some more reasonable prices along the range of $1.50 for a quality pack of baseball cards.

"The kids are still into collecting cards as well as all the other forms of sports memorabilia," added DiMaggio.

The Back River is clogged with the silvery fish below the East Weymouth ladder. The Herring Brook off the Driftway is hot and cold depending on the tide. Schoolies are in all the favorite haunts according to excited reports coming in.

Shiners are prime bait right now for fresh water anglers tired of chasing trout and want to do battle with big bass. Calico bass or crappies as they are known on cable fishing shows are thick along the shore on hot sunny days. Perch are in their spring spawn. Slow trolled spinners will bring pickerel smashing to investigate.

American Cancer Society to sponsor 'Relay for Life'

The American Cancer Society's South Shore Unit will hold its Relay for Life on May 29 and 30 involving teams of walkers and runners who will round a track, 'round the clock, to raise funds for the fight against cancer.

According to Mary Jeanette Murray, event honorary chairman, the American Cancer Society hopes to raise $35,000 during the relay, through walkers collecting sponsorships from friends, family members, and co-workers. The relay will be held at Cohasset High School in Cohasset.

Each team will keep a representative on the track throughout the 24 hours, with members walking in half-hour shifts. Starting the "night-shift" will be a candlelight ceremony to remember loved ones who have fought cancer. Team members camp out around the track throughout the night. A pancake breakfast will take place on Saturday, May 30 beginning at 7 a.m. The breakfast is open to the public.

"I encourage anyone interested in joining the Relay for Life to call the American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600," Murray said. "The relay will be a great way to renew our hope in the fight against cancer, while also doing something practical to support the American Cancer Society's research , education, and patient service programs."

The American Cancer Society is seeking people to form teams for the relay, and to join teams that need a few more members. To date, 17 teams have registered to participate. The planning committee is hoping to secure thirty teams this year. Teams can be families, friends, churches, organizations or companies.

Funds raised during the relay will support American Cancer Society cancer control programs, including a research initiative that has supported 28 Nobel Prize winners during its history. The society is continuing the world's largest population study and continues to examine factors that affect cancer risk.

The American Cancer Society is also a source for comprehensive information about cancer through its 1-800-ACS-2345 number, which operates from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Fridays. Funds raised during the Relay for Life support this service, which also connects callers to services offered for patients and families.

Local services provided by the American Cancer Society to cancer patients include transportation to outpatient treatment by Road to Recovery volunteer drivers, support for women with breast cancer through the Reach to Recovery visitor program, and information on maintaining personal appearance during treatment through the Look Good.... Feel Better program.

to obtain information about the "Relay for Life" and tickets to the Pancake Breakfast, please call the American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600 ext. 232.

Skippers try to keep tourney hopes alive

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

With a thin pitching staff and suddenly-quieted bats, the Cohasset Skippers have stumbled across the mid-season mark and limped out with a 5-8 record.

Requiring a .500 record of 10-10 just to qualify for the state tournament, the ball club finds itself painted in a corner, with no options but to start winning.

Last week, the Skippers dropped an away game to the East Bridgewater Vikings. Despite staying close for four innings and timely hits from Denis Rooney, Joe Pergola and Sean Conte, Cohasset could not hang on, and the home team pulled away.

Jim O'Sullivan hurled six innings and shouldered the loss.

Growing tired, he started to get knocked around in the fifth and by the end of the sixth, the contest was all but over.

A similar script was played out Monday against the Carver Crusaders. Having been stunned by the Skippers with a 2-1 loss in the season's third game, Carver was gunning for them when the Boys in Blue traveled south.

Sean Parkinson started the game with O'Sullivan at catcher but the two soon switched. Pat Hurley pitched well in relief of O'Sullivan, who took the loss.

Although their pitching has certainly been lackluster, Cohasset cannot fault just the depleted staff for its losses. Fielding has been irregular, at times downright heinous, and the bats have been relatively hushed for the last few games.

Mike Rossi, Greg Taylor, Rooney and Conte have all been stroking the ball, but the rest of the line-up needs to start swinging the bat like they were before April break.

Cohasset has failed to play a solid seven innings since the first South Shore Vo-Tech game, two weeks ago. Now, with room for only two more losses, is the time for the Skippers to show the South Shore League their mettle and make a run at a tourney berth.

Davis Track dedication is today

The running track at Alumni Field will be dedicated to former Cohasset High School track coach and teacher Charlie Davis today (May 7) in ceremonies beginning at 3:30 p.m.

Numerous friends and colleagues will be on hand to honor Davis, who taught at CHS from 1961 into the 1980s before he died unexpectedly in 1985.

During that time Davis was also a very successful track coach at the school.

For more information, call CHS at 383-6100.

Competition makes college decisions tough

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The last colleges to report on their admissions decisions delivered the results two weeks ago, ending the suspense for many high school seniors waiting for an acceptance letter from the college of their choice. This year the competition was stiff at the "safety schools" as well as the selective schools.

"It seems to me it has been a very bizarre year," said Cohasset High senior Alia Afshar. She said many of her friends did not get into their "safety schools" where they felt sure they would be accepted. But the same students also got into some of the competitive schools where they doubted they stood a chance. The situation was different in nearby Hanover where students found few surprises either good or bad.

Lindy Holway, a senior at Cohasset High, did not go after an early decision but later wished she had. Most of the eight schools where she applied were supposed to report between April 1 and April 15. Though the first ones came in with the results a bit early, the wait still got nerve-wracking.

"The whole two months before, you're starting to get a little crazy," Holway said. "You're thinking about it all the time starting right after you sent them in."

Admissions officers at area schools said they chose the Class of 2002 from a large number of outstanding students. For instance, Harvard University Admissions Director Marlyn McGrath Lewis said getting into the nation's top-ranked college this year was as hard as ever. But the "real story" in 1998 concerned the impressive quality of the applications. About 2,073 seniors won letters of acceptance from the nation's oldest college, but Lewis said little separated them from the top 8,400 hopefuls. In all, 16,818 students tried for a place in the Harvard Class of 2002, not a record crop of applications, but close to the record. About 52 percent of the applications came from men, and the admissions numbers followed roughly the same pattern with fewer women making the grade.

"The top half was a tightly packed pool of excellence," she said. With so many students presenting virtually identical test scores and grades, the decision often came down to a review of exceptional talents. Students who excelled in athletics, music or politics ranked among the few who received a nod from Harvard. Still, the main consideration hinged on academics. The Admissions Director studied the difficulty of the student's high school courses and then asked how well the student could use the school's resources. She stressed it was hard to compare students who all presented strong records and downplayed the importance of the SAT scores. Nonetheless, Harvard uses the standardized tests. This year's freshmen class averaged scores in the 690-790 range on the math section and the 700-800 range on the verbal. Lewis said it was important to remember Harvard does not go by a "cutoff" score. Some students who turned in lower test scores still got in.

But local guidance counselors did not find this year unusual. Mary Babaian, guidance counselor at Cohasset High, said the whole picture did change several years ago when "more kids were catching on to using the common application." It is a form many colleges have agreed to accept; and since it only has to be filled out once, it made it easier for youngsters to send out more applications.

"Many top flight students applying to more top-flight schools," she said. But Babaian said Cohasset High students still handled the competition pretty successfully.

"I don't think our kids had that much of a difficulty," she said. "Naturally, there are disappointments." Babaian pointed to a year when no seniors landed a berth at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire. Only the year before, the prestigious Ivy League school took five Cohasset seniors. Some of them were not so good candidates as the seniors who lost out the next year.

Three Cohasset seniors applied to D.C. schools this year, Babaian said. The other "hot" schools were Bryant College in Smithfield, R.I., the University of Vermont and the University of New Hampshire.

On Tuesday, May 19, the South Shore Art Center will present a garden tour combining magnificent ocean vistas with sculptural installations and plein air painting. Art with a View is an opportunity to share the inspiration of sculptors and painters on-site at nine secluded Cohasset estates, all with spectacular landscaping and water views.

The tour will begin at the Lightkeeper's Residence overlooking Cohasset Harbor, where refreshments will be served throughout the day and where tickets ordered in advance may be picked up. Shuttle vehicles will be available for those who prefer not to drive their own cars. A boutique offering garden topiaries, gift ensemble baskets and stationery will also be located at the Lightkeeper's Residence.

Art with a View will offer art lovers a rare chance to observe the creation of landscape paintings and to enjoy sculptures installed in private settings of great natural beauty. We have to agree with Henry David Thoreau, who wrote after visiting Cohasset in 1850, "Cohasset Rocks . . . the most perfect seashore that I had seen."

As a sequel, the South Shore Art Center will host a Fresh Paint Auction Saturday night, June 13, at the Cohasset gallery. This auction will enable collectors to revisit paintings created during "Art with a View" and to make considered decisions in an unhurried and festive atmosphere.

Town gears up for Harborfest

By Bob Martin
FOR THE HARBORFEST COMMITTEE

Cohasset Harborfest events will be held the weekend of June 5, 6 and 7. Events will include the Luminaria, the Pancake Breakfast, Center Stage Entertainment, the Blessing of the Fleet and the Harborfest Parade. Other events may be added.

In December, Harborfest made a town-wide solicitation for funds for the 1998 celebration. We have received 137 checks totaling $3,321. This was a very gratifying response and we thank those who have responded. If you still have our return envelope with your "things to do," this would be a good time to fill it up and send it along.

We have also received a donation of $500 from the Cohasset Rotary, $900 from the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, $80 from Barry Waste Services Inc., and we have commitments of $300 from Sunrise Assisted Living and $250 from the Cohasset Yacht Club. We are still a little shy of our budget of $6,000.

The Joseph Osgood School will celebrate its 70th Anniversary during the Harborfest weekend. The Osgood participation emphasizes the focus of Harborfest as a Cohasset celebration. The Osgood exhibits will open in tents on the Common Friday afternoon through Sunday afternoon.

We will dedicate the Luminaria Friday evening, June 5, to those Cohasset residents who have passed away during the past year. Relatives are encouraged to join us in the placing of the candles around the Common Pond. The Luminaria will be followed by a Concert of Sacred Choral Music at the Art Center, sponsored by The South Shore Art Center.

The Ice Cream Festival Friday and Saturday is directed toward kids, of all ages, and is a great opportunity to support the Cohasset Food Pantry with a donation of canned goods or items such as soap or other household products.

The Cohasset Rotary will conduct the Pancake Breakfast Saturday morning with the proceeds going to the Teen Center.

The Teen Center Speed Pitching will make an encore appearance Friday and Saturday. Volunteers to help out on this very labor intensive project will be greatly appreciated.

Center Stage Entertainment will again be under the very able direction of The Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church and will open at 2:15 p.m. Friday afternoon and again at 10 a.m. Saturday. The South Shore Men of Harmony will appear at 5 p.m. Saturday.

The Cohasset Yacht Club will sponsor The Blessing of The Fleet which, of course, features the Cohasset Clergy Association. Each participant will receive a memento of the occasion.

Anna Abbruzzese, the Mariner Cohasset Citizen of the Year, will have the place of honor as our Grand Marshall of the Harborfest Parade. We hope to have a Baby Carriage Corps (if the weather is not too hot) in the parade so that the Moms and Dads can show off their little darlings. The Satuit Band, the Hingham Militia and the South Shore Joeys will be marching in the parade.

And, of course, the ultimate Norman Rockwell touch, our Harborfest Band will delight those lining the parade route with its "Home Town Flavor." Many will remember The Rev. Ed Atkinson beaming from ear to ear as he led his band in its inaugural performance.

We would welcome your participation in the Harborfest parade with a float, a band or a marching unit. Prizes of $ 50, $150 and $75 will be awarded. Call 383-0787 to keep us informed of your plans or if you have any questions.

Finally, we can not afford a photographer, and therefore we will appreciate copies of any pictures you take. We want to publish some pictures on our WebPage (WWW.cohassetma.com).

Emergency cell phones available

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the police department has three cellular telephones which will be available soon to victims of domestic violence through the Domestic Violence Victim Assistance Cellular Phone Program.

The phones have been provided through Bell Atlantic Mobile and the state Executive Office of Public Safety at no cost to the town.

Noonan explained that the phones can be lent to victims of domestic violence who need them to feel more secure after an emergency restraining order has been issued.

The phones only dial 9-1-1 which reaches the state police in Framingham who will forward the call to Cohasset.

Noonan said for example, if a victim has one phone in the kitchen and none in the bedroom, she can use the cell phone in the bedroom to feel more secure.

He said the telephones will be available once a policy is put in place for their distribution.

"We are trying to jump on everything we can as far as domestic violence is concerned," Noonan said. "We want to use every tool made available to help combat it."

Good deeds are focus of Temple's Mitzvah Day

By Alison Cohen
STAFF WRITER

It's not easy being God's chosen people. There's no sitting around feeling self-satisfied and self-important. The Almighty, it seems, firmly believes in delegating responsibility. Among the primary chores handed out on a daily basis is tikkun olam, or repairing the world.

That's because creation isn't foolproof. Accident, illness, aging, all take their tool on the living things that inhabit the world. The planet, too, suffers, whether from normal wear and tear or intentional harm. It's left to humans to take up the work of keeping everything in good repair. Fulfilling those duties is known as doing a mitzvah, or good deed.

Sounds like hard work, but Congregation Sha'Aray Shalom believes that many hands make for light work and merriment. On Sunday, May 3, the Hingham-based Reform Judaism congregation held its second annual Mitzvah Day.

At least 200 people showed up to tackle a whole host of chores. A team of 17 put their best feet forward and joined 40,000 other people in the annual Walk for Hunger. Others served lunch at Father Bill's Place, a shelter for homeless residents of the South Shore. In sum, they fed the hungry, helped their neighbors, showed respect for the elderly aided the sick and injured, took care of the environment, did acts of charity and promoted peace in their homes and the wider world.

Everyone who came expressed their own reasons for being there.

"I wanted to help," said 10-year-old Andrew Riedel of Hingham as he and his dad cleared a winter's worth of debris from the temple's gardens and prepared to plant flowers. "I'm doing this because I like to garden."

The warm temperatures and sunny day inspired lots of gardeners. Molly Ruben, 10, Thomas Guiney, 3 and Thomas's dad, Patrick, all of Hull, were digging holes for bulbs.

"I want to help make the temple a nicer place," Molly said. Thomas just giggled and said his bulb looked like a crab.

Hinghamite Bonnie Bycoff and her son, Lorne, 14, decided to attend the first aid and CPR course.

"I'm here because I'm doing a mitzvah," Lorne said. "It's good to learn how to save someone's life."

Mia Lieb-Lappen, 10, her brother, Ross, 13, and their mom, Helene Lieb, all of Cohasset, also took the first aid course. They learned the hard way how important it is to know how to take care of health emergencies. In a freak accident that happened two years ago, Ross's baited fish hook wound up in his sister's eye. Although they can laugh about the sight of the bait flapping around her eye now, it was a terrifying time then.

"It's important to know what to do if somebody is bleeding or choking," Ross said. "You'll probably have to use first aid some day."

Children spending their spring days stuck in a hospital will be the recipients of greeting cards made with crayon, markers, glitter glue, feathers, sequins and lots of love.

Carly Sakolove, 12, of Hingham found a picture of a sweet-faced golden retriever that she glued on her card and added the message "Look at these eyes . . . They're begging you to get well."

Many children in area hospitals will find hand-made cards from Marc Brown in the collection. The world-renowned children's author and illustrator decorated cards with pictures of his famous aardvark Arthur and Arthur's chums for distribution as well as helping children at the art table come up with their own designs.

Kate Levine, 12 , of Weymouth said she made greeting cards because she learned how much hospitalized children value those contacts with the outside world when her religious school class went to play games and brought gifts to Floating Hospital for Children.

"I made like three," she said. "I drew some names so I know who my cards are going to."

Justin Weintraub, 6, of Norwell was unstoppable. He wanted to do it all.

"First, I made plants and second I went to the Mary Martha Learning Center," Justin said, proudly showing of the tiny inchworm he found in the garden. "I sweeped up there."

Justin was with his uncle, Ben Weintraub of Scituate. The senior Weintraub said he and his son, Jesse, chose to help senior citizens with their handyman needs.

"Jesse and I helped a lady who had some spring projects that needed doing like installing screens and fixing leaky faucets," he said. "Her family all lives down in North Carolina."

The Weintraubs did more than just fix faucets. They took the time to get to know someone who was a little lonely and very proud of having lived long enough to become a great grandma.

Weintraub said he was part of a work crew of about 11 people who volunteered to help out wherever they were needed.

Rabbi Stephen Karol, his wife, Mary and their daughter Samantha, 12, all chose the Walk for Hunger as their Mitzvah Day project.

"It's something I always wa[illegible]d to do," Rabbi Karol explained. "We love to walk and it's a great caus[illegible]"

Karol hopes Mitzvah Day becomes an annual tradition at the temple.

"It lets people know the 'nice things' they do are actually rooted in our ethical tradition," he said. "It makes people aware that every little bit of the good things they do makes a difference. It's what you do that counts."

Joan Carr, director of religious education at the temple quickly added that every day is and should be mitzvah day.

"This is just the tip of the iceberg of the mitzvot that are done throughout the year and on a daily basis by the people of Sha'Aray Shalom," Carr said. "Most of them you never hear about."

Home prices skyrocket as inventory drops

Million-dollar market soars

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The good times are rolling for property owners in Cohasset with average property values surging 15 percent over last year.

Currently, the median price of a home in Cohasset is $310,000 with newer four-bedroom homes going up in subdivisions in the $500,000 range. And the good times are just as good for homes selling for more than $1 million.

Chris Ford of Prudential Prime Properties/Hallmark 100 said his company has already closed on one sale, the "Bigelow Estate" on Blackhorse Lane, for $1.6 million. Ford added that he has three other sales pending for more than $1 million including the former home of Michael Kennedy on Atlantic Avenue, a large Victorian, where Little Harbor meets the ocean. That home listed for $2.3 million. Ford expects to close on seven or eight $1million-plus homes by the end of the year. Last year there was only one home sold in Cohasset for more than $1 million.

"Houses in the million dollar-plus range are purchased by people with great ability to do so," Ford said. "Many of them may be buying their dream houses. But one thing's for sure: million dollar prices on a regular basis is a new phenomenon."

Estimates are there are currently 100 to 150 homes in Cohasset worth more than $1 million.

Janice Crowley, a partner in Coastal Countryside Properties, also notes her office has several "deals in the works" for $1 million-plus and one under agreement for more than $1 million at 133 Nichols Road.

"Real estate prices are higher this year than last year," she said. "There

Fond memories mark CHS track dedication

By David Wolcott

"When I think about Charlie Davis, it can't help but bring a smile to my face."

As those words from Cohasset High School principal Curtis Collins echoed around Alumni Field, his gathered friends and family would have really enjoyed using Davis' smile as their umbrella last Thursday in soggy ceremonies dedicating the running track at the high school in his name.

Davis was a well-respected Math teacher and track coach at the high school from 1961 until his death in 1985.

In those years he truly did leave his mark on Cohasset High School, making many friends along the way and having his influence "felt far beyond the classroom" according to the CHS Class of 1964, who dedicated their yearbook to him.

"You have become a true friend to every student," part of the inscription read. "A much admired and respected one."

In his time at the school he was called a master motivator both in the classroom and on the athletic field.

School state tests get mixed reviews

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset High students attacked the monster battery of state tests last week. They found the monster much easier to beat than they expected. But they also learned attitude made a difference.

"I don't see what the big hype is about," said Matt Santoro, 16. "This test is not that hard. You got to be, like, I don't want to do this."

Santoro and seven other sophomores talked last Thursday about their experiences with the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test. The 10th graders, along with the fourth- and eighth-graders, made a bit of history when they became the first group to be tested on the state's tough new exam. The experience left them unimpressed but full of questions about the test's purpose.

As Kate Stone, 16, put it, "Eighty percent of the state is supposed to fail. What is their intent in giving the test? We're a pretty well-educated school. An 'A' in Cohasset is really an 'A.'"

Stone said the test looked easy so far. Midway through the first week of the test schedule, they just finished the English and language arts sections. Math and science came this week.

"It will be interesting to see the math," said Stone. She was a little worried because she has not been in a math class the last four months because of the new

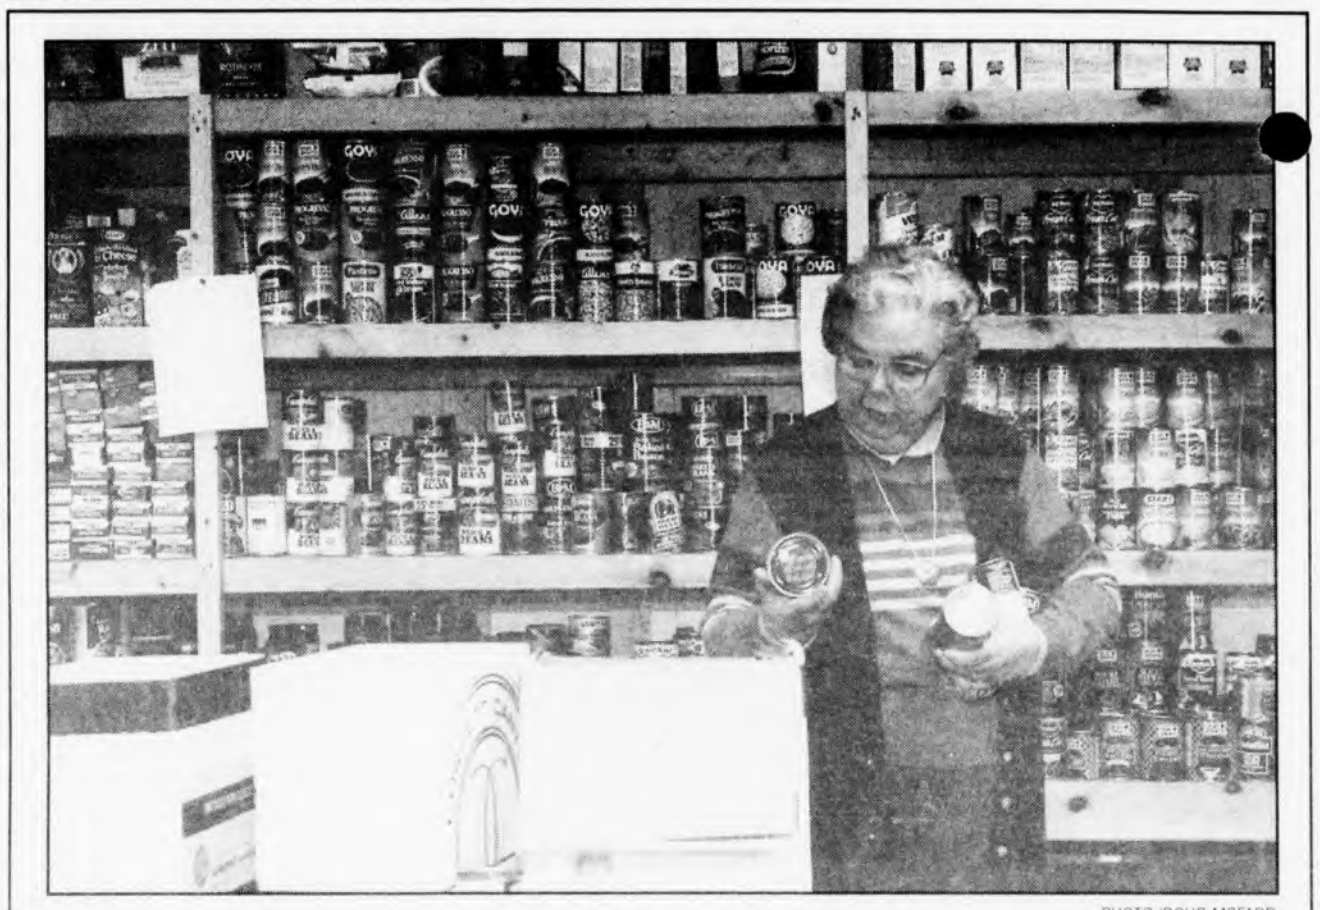
Spring cleaning at water department



As the spring 1998 construction period has begun, C.W.S. wants to inform the residents of Cohasset as to the schedule of projects this year:

- Cleaning and lining on Atlantic Avenue May 4-26.
- Cleaning and lining on Jerusalem Road May 26 - July 15.

C.W.S. would like to remind residents of Cohasset that temporary discoloration in the construction areas can happen off and on during the cleaning and lining process. The discoloration is only temporary and the water is safe to drink.

Sewer symposium slated

On Wednesday, May 27, at 7:30 p.m., in the Cohasset High School auditorium, CEES is sponsoring an informational meeting on various aspects of sewering. All Cohasset citizens are invited. The panel of speakers will include representatives of town boards including the Board of Health and Capital Budget Committee. In addition, attendees will hear from Sen. Robert Hedlund; DEP New England Region Water Pollution control manager David Ferris; hydrogeologist and BC Professor Peter Dillon; Camp, Dresser and McKee Sr. VP Tom Morgan, who is responsible for Hingham and Kingston sewer projects, as well as others. The goal of the meeting is the presentation of information, so all Cohasset citizens can gain a better understanding of the options available to Cohasset, CEES said.

Jean Thompson stocks the Cohasset Food Pantry at the Second Congregational Church with some of the more than two tons of food collected by local letter carriers on Saturday. The annual drive is sponsored by the National Association of Letter Carriers and operated in conjunction with the US Postal Service, AFL-CIO and the United Way.

Beach permits on sale soon

Your beach permits expire May 31. Beach stickers will be on sale at the town hall starting Wednesday, May 13, and will have the following schedule: Monday and Wednesday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Thursday 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Permits now being issued will expire May 31, 1999.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Title V, loans and credits

Selectmen want townspeople to know there are low-interest loans and state income tax credits available to residents who have upgraded a septic system that was in failure.

The loans — which can range from $1,000 to $25,000, at an interest rate of zero, three or five percent depending on the homeowner's income and market area — are available at various banks throughout the state.

The maximum tax credit is $6,000 and is limited to $1,500 in any tax year.

Homeowners with questions should call the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MHFA) at (617) 854-1020 or 854-1333.

Recalling times gone by at the Osgood School

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Libby Pompeo has never hugged a building in her long life. But Pompeo and the rest of the Osgood School's very first second-grade class will start a tradition this June when they step forward for "a hugging of the school." The ceremony will be a highlight of the last day of school when the Osgood closes for good.

The Osgood School's last chapter is supposed to be written next month. But no one yet knows how or when the saga will end. The building is expected to be sold next fall when students, teachers and staff move to the new elementary school behind the Deer Hill. Now with so much construction work left to be done inside the new building, it appears the old school could be pressed into service again next September for just a few more weeks.

WINDOWS INTO COHASSET

The school department will make a decision about holding the first day of school at the new building perhaps as early as June. But whether or not the end for Osgood is prolonged, there is no doubt the last day of school at the Ripley Road building will come someday soon. Meanwhile, sentiment has been growing for the old school and the 75 years of a tradition in public education begun by its namesake the Rev. Joseph Osgood. Many are sad to see the end of school at the building.

"My heart is broken to see this go out," Pompeo said. She has many happy memories of school days and particularly recalled winning a wild flower contest. Her teacher Elinor Kennedy gave her "the dearest little book" as a prize.

"I knew the first cowslip, the first snowdrop, the first violet," Pompeo said because her house was in Fair Oaks near the woods. Her teacher recalled nature science was one of the areas she stressed with the children. Kennedy, now 96, was in her first year of teaching when the building opened as the Ripley Road School right after winter vacation in February 1926. The class went back to the old school, then known as the Osgood, to pick up their books and supplies. Then Kennedy led her young charges "on a very cold morning" up the street to the new school.

Kennedy said the Ripley Road School had room for two classes for each grade. Previously, one teacher had 42 children in the room.

"It was impossible to handle it all," she said. Kennedy has written a letter to the Mariner about the old days at the Osgood. She hopes she will make it to the closing day ceremony but wanted to make sure she put the story down "in black and white" in case she does not.

"I'm 96. Maybe I won't make June under the tent. But I wrote everything down and put it in black and white so it will be there," she said about the special Osgood celebration planned for Harborfest, June 5-7.

Kennedy was a favorite teacher even of students who did not like school. Henry Brennock, in the first kindergarten class in 1926, said he was not a very good student. But he liked all his teachers, particularly Kennedy. Brennock later worked at the school as a custodian, and he is not the only custodian who once went to school in the building. Kenny Sargent went to kindergarten at the Osgood in 1953. He is the custodian at the Osgood now.

Sargent said he also disliked school but had happy memories of the Osgood nonetheless. The best times came playing baseball in the gravel behind the school.

"The Little League just started in town, and all the sixth grade boys played," he said.

Arthur Lehr and Louis Simeone started school when the building opened in February 1926. They both had memories of the auditorium dubbed the Great Hall. Lehr said town meetings and Boy Scout ceremonies went on there. But the building itself did not impress him that much even though it was brand new. Like the other boys, he did not like going to school.

"The girls were more wrapped up in the school," he said. But Lehr, who became an engineer, now thinks the school building "a beautiful structure." He deemed the Osgood in "pretty good shape" even though the town has neglected it.

Simeone, who was in first grade in 1926, sounded much the same theme as Lehr.

"It's sad," he said. "It's like somebody kicked you out of your own house."

Perhaps the person who is the saddest of all is a descendant of the Rev. Joseph Osgood. His great-granddaughter was in the first pre-kindergarten class when the school opened in 1926. She called this week to ask what will happen to Osgood's portrait if the new school is named after someone else. Frances Maroni, now of Falls Church, Va., said she hopes the new school will also bear her ancestor's name. If it does or if another school is named after him, the portrait, by her grandaunt Louise Osgood Koopman, should stay in Cohasset, she said. The decision is up to the town. But she will be sorry if there is no longer an Osgood School in Cohasset. Maroni has read about his work in his diaries and letters as well as in the town history. Though many people have forgotten the story, Osgood's contribution to Cohasset has stood the test of time.

Osgood pupils leave at the end of the school day the same way they have for more than 76 years. The school will soon be replaced by a new school under construction off Sohier Street.

"So many new people don't have the slightest idea who Joseph Osgood was," she said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "He was quite a guy." Osgood was a graduate of the Harvard Divinity School, a friend of Henry David Thoreau and a state Representative. But he became best known as "the father of the Cohasset school system" where he served as a teacher, school committee chairman and school superintendent. Originally, he came to Cohasset originally as a minister and fell in love with the town. In his diary he described riding over the hill from Sohier to North Main Streets and looking at the Town Common.

"There's a place I could spend the rest of my life," he said. Osgood served as the Unitarian minister but he also was an unofficial chaplain to the Irish and Portuguese Catholics who settled in the town. But education was his passion. Ultimately, he replaced the one-room school houses in the town with a modern school system.

"The disorganization of the whole thing bothered him greatly," she said. "He would rent a horse-drawn vehicle and drive around to the one-room school house at Beechwood and at the Centre School. He was horrified at the quality of teaching. The big boys lorded it over the teachers. They were tough. Some days the big boys would go off fishing, and it wreaked havoc with their education." Osgood pushed himself to reform the schools even though he was in poor health and the work tired him out. He consolidated the one-room schools at the First Central School on Elm Street. (It was later named the Osgood School.) He also established a modern high school for both girls and boys.

"So many new people don't have the slightest idea who Joseph Osgood was. He was quite a guy."

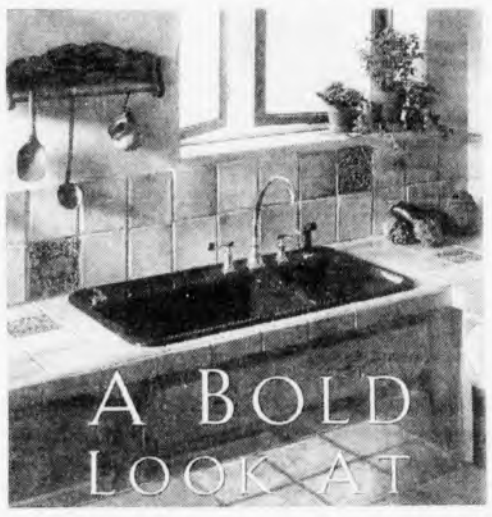
Osgood's great-granddaughter

The Ripley Road School was eventually named for Osgood after the old Osgood School (originally the First Central) was demolished. Interestingly, the school maintained a connection with the Unitarian Church. Former principal Kay Mulcahy, 90, said the church helped out and let her have two rooms for kindergarten in the Parish House. There was no money from the town for extra classrooms, she said.



"We were blessed in that way," said Mulcahy who said all her years at Osgood were "pleasant experiences."

State tests get mixed reviews schedule and thought the layoff might hurt her score.

"English stays with you better," she said. Stone whipped through 12 multiple-choice questions on the English section in "a few minutes." Nonetheless, she and the other students reported problems understanding directions on the long composition. Chris Pratt, 16, found the question vague, and everyone ended up taking the wrong approach, according to Caitlin Stansell, 16.

"Everyone made up a story," she said. After the test, their teacher said they should have analyzed the paragraph. Bad directions and guesswork marked the first days of the test, all the students said.

"The whole thing isn't clear enough," said Jackie Kahn, 16, but she and Ben Peterson, 15, agreed the short questions turned out to be a lot easier than the long composition. Peterson said the short questions really did not seem challenging. For instance, one question excerpted lines from Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra and asked the student to explain to answer questions about the passage. The answer was right in the passage, he said.

As Kate Stone, 16, put it, "Eighty percent of the state is supposed to fail. What is their intent in giving the test? We're a pretty well-educated school. An 'A' in Cohasset is really an 'A.'"

"It's not like we're using our own thoughts," he said. "It's not at all analytical."

The students' positive attitude was pretty much expected. Their principal was beaming. Curtis Collins said the youngsters put out a grand effort.

"We have a lot of competitive kids," he said. "A lot of our kids would take this on as a challenge." When the students heard they were "supposed" to fail, some said, "Oh, yeah?" But Collins was not ready to predict the scores would be high.

"This has been a tedious exercise," he said mainly because the writing section of exam was taking much more time than originally anticipated. This week the math section went faster, he said. Thursday, the test will be over in the fourth- and 10th grades. The eighth-grade will continue with the test next week. Collins also said the test has been "glitch" free except for some problems with the directions. One set of directions was supposed to be ignored. Another set appeared in the wrong part of the test book.

Health board delays Cohasset Heights meeting

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The health board has delayed from May 12 until June 9 a meeting to discuss various violations by Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) at the request of attorneys for the owners of the landfill.

CHL-attorney John Beling said he needs time to respond to a request from the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) asking the health board to rescind the landfill's site assignment.

The meeting was originally scheduled to discuss what steps CHL-owner Paul Barry should take to remove 7,800-square-feet of material illegally placed in a section of CHL not approved for landfilling. SAFE was also on the agenda to lobby the health board to rescind CHL's site assignment to operate the landfill.

Beling said he wants to prepare a rebuttal to a document presented by SAFE detailing the reasons why the health board should rescind the site assignment.

"A cursory examination of this document shows that it is rife with factual errors, misleading statements, and erroneous conclusions of law," Beling wrote in a letter to the health board dated May 7. "If the board plans on considering this information, CHL would like the opportunity, at a minimum, to address each and every error in the document, which is no small task."

CHL-attorney John Beling said he needs time to respond to a request from the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) asking the health board to rescind the landfill's site assignment.

SAFE vice president John K. McNabb Jr. said he agreed to the delay because he wants the health board to approve site assignment hearings immediately after his presentation.

"I want the health board to vote right then and there," McNabb said.

Meanwhile, Building Inspector Robert Egan has filed a criminal complaint against the CHL in Quincy District Court to shut down the facility permanently because of a permit violation. A hearing on the criminal complaint is scheduled for May 28 in Quincy District Court. CHL has defied the shut down order and remained open, filing a lawsuit against the town in land court seeking to overturn Egan's decision.

Water contracts to be awarded

On May 21, the water commission will announce the company that will operate and maintain the town's treatment plant for the next three years.

The Cohasset Water Company is the current operator. The water commission is empowered to renew contracts with existing providers, but a clerical error in the current agreement forced the commission to put the contract out for bids.

Three companies have responded to the request for proposals: The Cohasset Water Company, American Anglian Water Company, which is a Dedham Westwood company half-owned by the Mass. American Water Company, and U.S. Water, a national chain.

The water commission will meet on Tuesday, May 19, to prepare its final recommendations. On Wednesday, May 20, Town Manager Mark Haddad will open the sealed price bids. Haddad will compare the price bids to the water commission's recommendations, and the contract will be awarded on Thursday, May 21.

Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the commission does not necessarily have to accept the lowest bid as long as it can offer valid reasons for accepting a more expensive proposal.

Hot Dogs on Memorial Day

Immediately following the Memorial Day parade on May 25, the Cohasset Lightkeepers again will provide hot dogs, hamburgers, soft drinks etc. At no charge on the grounds of the Lightkeepers House. Everyone is welcome.

Streets to be resurfaced

The following streets are scheduled to be resurfaced (weather permitting), according to DPW Supt. Harold W. Litchfield. Residents should expect some delays when traveling these roads: Hammond Avenue, Joy Place, Elm Court, Border Street Pier and Hugh Strain Road.

Two public sewer forums are in the offing

Citizens group snubs sewer commission

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A vocal citizens group is taking their case to the people at a public forum on the town sewer projects at 7:30 p.m., May 27 at the high school auditorium.

But noticeably absent from the invited panel of speakers — which includes representatives from the health board and capital budget committee — is the sewer commission.

"The town has heard a lot from the sewer commission and their viewpoint," said Nancy Herlin, a spokeswoman for Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES). "They can come as members of the audience like anyone else but they are not on the panel."

The goal of the meeting is to provide citizens with a better understanding of the options regarding sewering available to Cohasset, Herlin said.

The sewer commission has the same goal in mind at a public "state of the sewer" forum for north and central Cohasset, which it has planned for the following week at 7:30 p.m., June 4, at town hall.

The sewer commission meeting follows a request from a group of about 70 citizens in the Linden Drive area — who stressed they are not part of CEES — which petitioned selectmen last week to postpone holding a special town meeting on the sewer until a public informational meeting on the project could be held.

The sewer commission and CEES are clearly at odds.

In a four-page informational packet CEES sent to selectmen, CEES advocates selectmen take control of a master sewering plan and delegate its implementation to the sewer commission, an independently elected board.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said the north and central Cohasset projects, which add about 1,100 homes to the sewer, cost in excess of $20 million. To sewer most of the remaining 55 percent of the households in town would cost $55-$60 million. Currently only 8 percent of the homes in town are on sewers.

"CEES acknowledges its recent successes have undermined the credibility of the sewer commission in the eyes of the state Attorney General's office, the Department of Environmental Protection and Cohasset citizens," CEES wrote.

Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild said the sewer commissioners, as individuals, have not decided yet if they will attend the CEES forum.

Herlin described the current sewer plan as "doing a puzzle without a box top," in other words, it's impossible to know how to proceed without knowing what the big picture looks like, she said.

CEES, which includes about 100 homeowners in the Little Harbor area, which includes Nichols Road and part of Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue, formed last year to object to being placed in a "septic management district" requiring septic system inspections and possible expensive system upgrades. The group succeeded in holding off implementation of the district until pollution in Little Harbor could be studied to see where the contamination is coming from and other options for wastewater treatment for the area could be examined.

Herlin said the group's focus has now gone beyond obtaining sewer for their neighborhood and back looking at a comprehensive wastewater management plan for the entire town.

She said the forum is intended to be purely informational.

"Until people have information, they can't draw appropriate judgments," Herlin said.

A frustrated Guild accused CEES organizers of "throwing a lot of statements against the wall in hopes that some with stick."

"Bear in mind that once the current projects are done, 45 percent of the households in town will be on sewers," he said.

Guild said the sewer commissioners are following what town meeting has authorized them to do. Townwide sewering could encourage more development. Guild said the town has consistently voted for orderly growth. If that should change, the commissioners will abide by future town meeting decisions, he said.

"If the town wants to extend the sewer beyond what's being done — obviously that can be done," he said. "But remember there is a very substantial price tag."

Guild said the north and central Cohasset projects, which add about 1,100 homes to the sewer, cost in excess of $20 million. To sewer most of the remaining 55 percent of the households in town would cost $55-$60 million, he said. Currently only 8 percent of the homes in town are on sewers.

He did not rule out the eventual sewering of the Little Harbor area. Homes there could be added to the north Cohasset district if there is more available capacity from Hull or to central Cohasset district if it is determined that the upgraded town treatment plant can handle more capacity.

In its press release CEES says state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, will speak at the forum along with David Ferris of the DEP, hydrologist Peter Dillon and Tom Morgan of Camp, Dresser & McKee, the engineering firm handling the Hingham and Kingston sewer projects.

Hedlund said either he or his aid, Erik Klaussen, will attend. He stressed that his role is to assist the town with any issues relating to DEP and to help pursue funding but it is not to interfere with any decisions that lie with the townspeople of Cohasset.

"I can give some general thoughts but that doesn't qualify me to be able to influence anyone's votes at town meeting or anywhere else."

Hedlund said there are no other sources of sewer funding at the state level "other than the things in which the sewer commission has diligently researched" including the state revolving fund and the Title 5 betterment program.

The advisory committee is also listed as a panel member in a CEES press release but its chairman Roger Whitley state emphatically that the advisory board would not participate.

Any advisory committee members who participate do so only as citizens, he said.

"We have taken no stand on the issue," Whitley said.

No special town meeting in pipeline

Battle between boards goes up in smoke

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The turf war between selectmen and sewer commissioners over who has the authority to award construction contracts may now be irrelevant.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said this week that the contractor D & C Construction Company, Inc. would not extend its pricing on a portion of the contract for the north Cohasset project, known as Contract 2.

While the notice of award had been given to the Rockland-based company, the contract was not issued and signed. However, the town will have to pay the contractor about $9,000 in costs he incurred.

Contract 2 needed to be kept alive in order to let a proposed special town meeting next month decide how financing the sewer project should be handled.

Now there is no point in calling a special town meeting, Guild said.

Selectmen and sewer commissioners got into an argument two weeks ago when they disagreed about terminating the contract. The dispute resulted in conflicting letters to the contractor.

The sewer project, which was bid twice, ended up coming in $2.7 million over estimates. This was despite being divided into four contracts to attract smaller contractors, and therefore more bidders.

Due to the cost, contracts 2, 3, & 4 which will connect homes in the north Cohasset area to the sewer main are on hold.

Due to the cost, contracts 2, 3, & 4 which will connect homes in the north Cohasset area to the sewer main are on hold. However, Contract 1, which will lay the sewer pipe in the streets, has been issued and is going forward.

Guild said the sewer commission will probably rebid all three contracts and see if town meeting will appropriate the money to be paid back entirely through betterments assessed to the homeowner. The other option is to use the remaining $1.4 million of the $6.6 million initially appropriated for the entire north Cohasset project to buy the components (valves, tanks and grinder pumps) for the hookups. Then the town would turn over the equipment to each homeowner's private contractor for installation. This option would only be considered if the state agreed to allow the highly favorable financing promised for the complete connections on just the components instead.

Guild said the sewer commission will conduct an informational meeting at 7:30 p.m., June 4 at town hall to discuss the pros and cons of the two options with north Cohasset residents.

Town Manager Act clarification sought

The sewer commission is seeking further clarification from town counsel on who has authority to issue contracts, specifically who has the decision-making function under the Town Manager Act, enacted last year.

In a letter to selectmen, Chairman Ted Guild said the Act states the sewer commission shall be "responsible for its facilities."

"We believe that this responsibility includes the responsibility and authority to select and to designate for award bidders on sewer projects," Guild wrote. "Otherwise, the sewer commissioners would be severely hampered in the discharge of their management responsibilities."

The question initially arose over who has the authority to terminate a contract. The sewer commissioners did not want part of the north Cohasset sewer project, known as Contract 2, terminated but selectmen did. See related story this page. The result was conflicting letters to the contractor. That point is now irrelevant because the contractor would not extend his pricing, Guild said.

But he stressed, going forward the sewer commissioners need this matter resolved.

Guild concedes the town manager has responsibility over the mechanical function of purchasing and the issuing of contracts such as the responsiveness of the bidders, adequacy and form of bid bonds, performance bonds and so on.

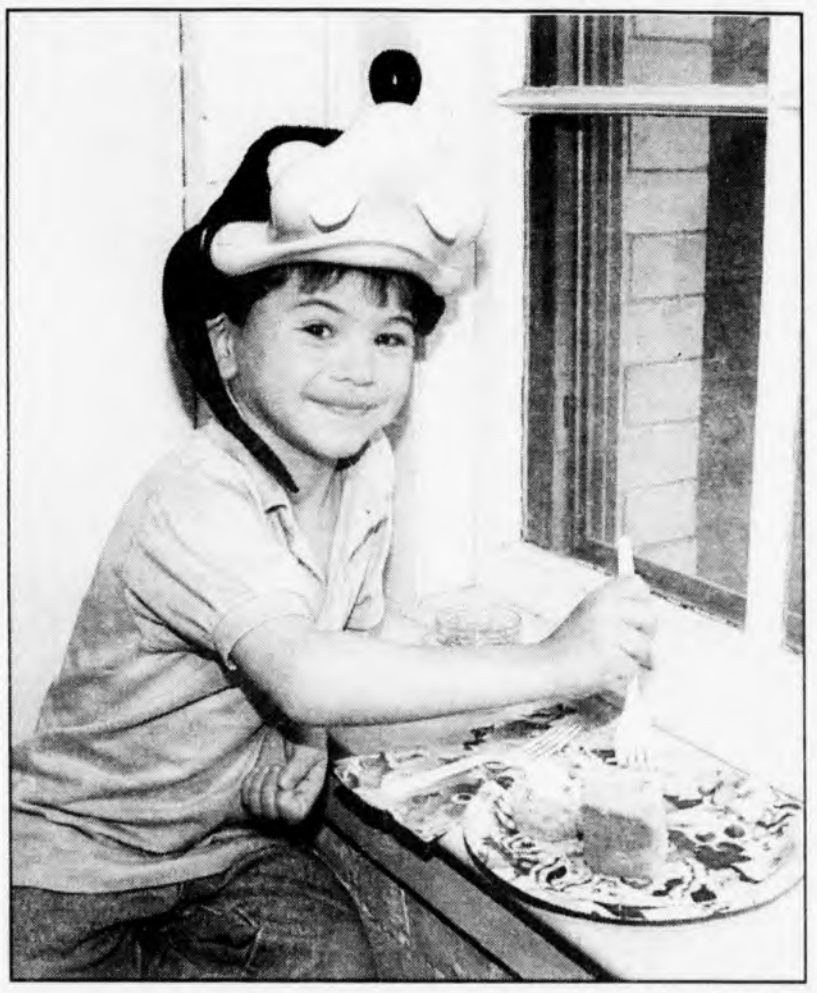
AROUND TOWN

NOT YOUR ORDINARY TOUR

Everyone we meet lately has one common complaint — when is this rain going to quit and "we missed spring again!" The South Shore Art Center has just the thing to get you out of the rainy doldrums, and think beauty! On Tuesday, May 19, they will present a unique event combining magnificent ocean vistas with sculptural installations and plein air painting. This is not your usual garden tour, but rather it is an opportunity for you to share the inspirations of sculptors and artists on site at nine secluded Cohasset estates, all with spectacular water or garden views. The tour will begin with picking up your ticket at the Lightkeepers Residence (where light refreshments will be served all day); shuttle services will be available for those who prefer not to drive. A boutique, offering garden topiaries, gift ensembles, stationery and other unusual gifts and accessories, will also be at the Lightkeepers Residence. This tour will offer art lovers a rare opportunity to observe the creation of original artworks in private settings of great natural beauty. Tickets are $25 in advance or $28 on tour day. Tour hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., and the raindate will be May 20. Call 383-2787 for more information.



QUIGLEYS TO VISIT

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Quigley arrived in Boston May 8 from their home in Florida! They are staying with Dick and Linda Quigley in Duxbury, but Edie promises to be in our town for a lot of that two-week visit! They will be driving around in that very familiar station wagon with the "EBQ" Florida plates on it, and are hoping that all who recognize it will stop and say hello! Won't it be nice to have them around town again!

BRAND NEW ARRIVAL

When you see Stephen and Judy Ward "strutting like two peacocks," now you will know the reason — she is Madeline Marie Ryan, born April 13 at 6:42 p.m. (she weighed 9 lbs. 15 oz.). Madeline is the daughter of Lisa (Ward) Ryan and John Ryan, who are both thrilled to pieces! Her paternal grandparent is Dorothy Ryan of Scituate. If the sun ever comes out, it is certain that Madeline will be spotted strolling around our fair town. Be sure to take a peek at that beautiful baby!

HONORS AT THAYER

Thayer Academy has announced their Upper School Term 2 honor roll, and here are the Cohasset residents who worked hard to make the list — Ashley H. Wilfand, daughter of Robert and Wendy Wilfand, who made High Honors; there were three students on the honor roll — Garrick J. Towle, son of Richard and Patience Towle, Brooke K. Baker, daughter of Stephen and Rosemary Baker; and Lauren M. Smith, daughter of William and Maureen Smith.

Thayer Academy's Middle School's honors also had several locals to boast about: Leigh-Anne Walsh (effort), Carly Kalus (achievement and effort); Dylan Lanzillotti (effort); Michael Ernst (achievement and effort); and Lindsay Feig (effort).

RELAY FOR LIFE

Speaking of raising money for causes, hopefully you are getting your team together for the "Relay for Life," the team event to fight cancer! A team registration fee of $5/member is due by May 18, which is rapidly approaching! It really is a grand 24 hours, teams camp out in tents around the track, there are tons of food and camaraderie. Each team sends members to walk or run around the track for the full 24 hours; this year they will also have a pancake breakfast from 7 to 10 a.m. May 30, free to relay participants (all others will be asked for a $3 donation). You can also sponsor a luminaria for a contribution of $5 or more to help light the night for runners — they go around the whole track and make an awesome sight! The name of your loved one will be placed on the light. Or, be a volunteer! Whatever you decide to do, "get ready, get set, go" — support this event!

All of the markets are featuring shrimp lately, it is a good buy and really good for you! The following recipe is one we tried just recently, and got rave reviews. Even if your stove doesn't fit your active lifestyle, you will love it, it is easily prepared and quick! Most importantly, it is attractive to present, so that you can use this as company fare.

CURRIED SHRIMP STIR FRY

1 cup peeled chopped tart apples
1/2 to 3/4 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup sliced celery
1/4 cup butter or margarine
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon curry powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon ground ginger
1/4 teaspoon ground pepper
1-1/2 cups chicken broth
1/2 cup milk
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 pound cooked shrimp, peeled and deveined
Hot cooked rice

In a large skillet or wok, stir-fry apple, onion and celery in butter for 10 minutes or until tender. Combine flour, curry powder, salt, ginger and pepper; add to apple mixture and mix well. Gradually stir in broth, milk and Worcestershire sauce. Bring to a boil; boil for 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Add shrimp and cook through. Serve over rice. Yields four servings.

Just purchase some of the wonderful fresh asparagus, steam it to desired doneness, put some nice fluffy hot rolls in a napkin-lined china bowl, and you will impress even the hardest critic!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

No apology required

It's news when three selectmen turn up unannounced at a school committee meeting. That's why we reported it in our April 23 issue.

But we are at a loss to explain why the story caused such a fuss at the two subsequent selectmen's meetings.

By the way of background, Selectmen Chairwoman Ronnie McMorris was slated to be at the April 16 school committee meeting to participate in contract negotiations which were conducted in executive session.. But Selectmen Tom Callahan and Merle Brown apparently attended simply out of interest.

Three selectmen constitute a quorum which is considered a meeting under the state Open Meeting Law and therefore must be posted 48 hours in advance.

According to the District Attorney's office, joint posting is required when a quorum of one board attends another board's meeting. The posting is required regardless of whether any decisions are made or votes taken. (See related letter page 11.)

We'd like to make it clear that we are not against committees attending each other's meetings. Quite the contrary — we encourage more interaction among boards which would certainly help facilitate communication and create a better understanding about issues in town.

For example, if the health board and sewer commission regularly went to each other's meetings, then the "Newtonville nightmare" involving a state of emergency over failing septic systems might have been avoided.

We realize at the school committee meeting on April 16 — the first after the town election — the selectmen's quorum was unintentional. Therefore, we did not file a complaint with the District Attorney's office about the "joint" meeting not being posted as such.

But at the next selectmen's meeting, Mr. Brown lambasted the Mariner for the story which he described as creating controversy where none existed. Mr. Callahan was away that week but took his turn at the following meeting.

He deemed the story "divisive" and bashed the newspaper for raising a question about the Open Meeting Law. Both men want us to apologize.

"I just think it's absurd. The Mariner's position is ridiculous," Mr. Callahan said. He vowed he was not going to give up his rights to go to board meetings because he is an elected official and wondered if selectmen would have to post a meeting when they brought their kids to Little League.

Clearly, social occasions (unless they are used as a pretext to conduct town business) are not covered under the Open Meeting Law — but meetings of governmental bodies are.

We think open government and public's right to know are paramount.

The only thing we're sorry about is elected officials wasting valuable time disputing the intent of the Open Meeting Law which protects your rights.

Health notes missed the mark

TO THE EDITOR:

The "Health Notes" column from the Board of Health in last week's issue contained a number of serious factual errors about the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) which need to be corrected.

It is not true, as they assert, that the threat to Lily Pond from CHL is "remote, distant and minimal." There is no question that surface water from CHL does in fact drain toward Lily Pond — even CHL has admitted that. The only two samples to date taken below Boulder Lane do show evidence of historical contamination traveling from CHL toward Lily Pond. Neither DEP nor the Board of Health have required CHL to conduct monitoring along the entire path of surface water flow downstream from CHL toward Lily Pond. If they haven't found evidence of contamination moving toward Lily Pond, it's only because they haven't looked for it (also, there is no such thing as an "unbiased" expert). The evidence does show that contaminants have traveled from CHL toward Lily Pond, and that this can occur every time it rains.

It is also untrue to claim that CHL is a "well managed" landfill. CHL has been improperly managing landfill gases and has inadequately managed erosion control. CHL has violated air quality violations, wetlands violations, water quality violations, earth removal regulations, zoning bylaws, state laws, state regulations and their site assignment from the Board of Health. The mismanagement has damaged more than 10 acres of wetlands, contaminated more than six acres of groundwater, and is regularly discharging large amounts of explosive methane gas underground.

CHL has also illegally dumped more than 2,000 tons of waste in Area IV-B, which does not have a site assignment and is located in the town water resource district, where all landfilling is prohibited. There is no proof that it is lined, as the Board of Health has claimed. For the Board of Health to say that "it doesn't make sense" to require CHL to remove this illegal waste, as the ZBA has required, makes a mockery of the Board of Health's legal authority. If the board is willing to turn a blind eye to this gross and flagrant violation by CHL, then why should any homeowner in Cohasset without the legal and financial resources of CHL feel that they need to comply with the board's regulations? They might as well rip them up.

Finally, while there clearly is a threat to Lily Pond from CHL, we don't need to show actual contamination of Lily Pond to be able to close CHL down. State law allows the Board of Health to rescind the CHL Site Assignment for less grievous problems. All the board has to show is that CHL is a "threat to public health, safety or the environment," which is quite easy. CHL's numerous violations of law and their proven damage to the air and water resources of the Town of Cohasset are, by themselves, sufficient legal grounds that not only allow the Board of Health, but compel the board — today — to shut CHL down.

Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc.

TO THE EDITOR:

Initially, the proposed Learning Laboratory for Marine Biology and Genetic Research, in the former Cohasset Colonials showroom, was sponsored by the non-profit Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation. However, it is now the project of a new non-profit organization, the Cohasset Lobster Lab. Inc., with Kevin Ulmer as president. A few board members are common to both organizations, but the organizations are completely separate.

The Board of Selectmen and the Cohasset Lobster Lab have reached agreement on a 10-year lease, essentially the same as proposed by the Lightkeepers 14 months ago.

Donations for the lab from townspeople and foundations have been kept in an escrow account, and are being turned over to the Cohasset Lobster Lab Inc.

DA's office clarifies Open Meeting Law

On posting open meetings

DEAR MS. FORD:

I am in receipt of your letter of April 27, inquiring as to the views of this office with respect to posting meetings of more than one government body when those bodies are meeting together.

This office has dealt with the question several times in the past, most exhaustively perhaps in March of 1997 with respect to an inquiry from the Town of Wellesley. I am enclosing for your information a copy of the letter ruling that we sent the Town of Wellesley, which sets forth our view at some length.

If I might quibble, perhaps unnecessarily, about a phrase in your letter of April 27, your inquiry about a requirement that the "participating boards . . . post a joint meeting separately." It is not our view that a "separate" posting is necessarily required; a single posting will do if that one posting suffices to notify the public that both boards will be meeting.

I hope this information is helpful to you.

Finally, since you have inquired about general policy and not alleged a specific violation, I have made no inquiries of any government body and have further made no assumptions that any violation has or has not occurred.

Robert C. Cosgrove

Assistant District Attorney

Ruling for town of Wellesley

Robert C. Cosgrove is a Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney. Here he is responding to a complaint about a violation of the Open Meeting Law in that town. The ruling may also pertain to Cohasset, he said.

March 7, 1997

DEAR GENTLEMEN:

I write to express the opinion of the District Attorney's Office with respect to Mr. Birch's complaint of Feb. 21, 1997, that Board of Assessors violated the open meeting law, G.L. c. 39, s. 23-B, by failing to post a notice of their meeting with the Selectman Feb. 4.

Based on the information provided by the parties, I find that assessors posted timely notice of a Feb. 4, 1997, meeting at 8:30 a.m. at the town hall, and that the selectmen posted timely notice of a Feb. 4, 1997, meeting at 7:30 p.m. at the town hall. I further find that at some point, the assessors adjourned their a.m. meeting and voted to reconvene at 5 p.m., thereafter meeting until invited to join the selectman's meeting in an adjacent room of the same building.

The question raised is whether the selectmen's meeting was also a meeting of the assessors, and if so, whether separate notice was required. If the answer is in the affirmative, a second question is raised: did the posting of the 8:30 a.m. meeting suffice as notice of the later meeting with the selectmen?

Taking the questions in reverse order, it seems to me that whatever the 8:30 a.m. posting might have accomplished to ensure technical compliance with the law, it was unlikely as a practical matter to truly notify anyone as to the time, place, or even existence of, the meeting with the selectmen.

The first question is not a difficult one, as this office has answered it before, albeit not in response to a complaint concerning the town of Wellesley. We have in the past rejected the argument that there was no "deliberation . . . to make a decision" and therefore, [here] the assessors did not meet within the meaning of the law. This office is of the opinion that whether or not the assessors were attempting to arrive at a decision in their meeting with the selectmen, their views were being solicited relative to public policy, and a verbal exchange was taking place, both amongst themselves and the selectmen, that might well influence future decisions and policies. See District Attorney for the Plymouth District v. Board of Selectmen of Middleborough, 395 Mass. 629, 634 n.6 (1985) ("exchange of views" between board and its attorney constitutes a "meeting" within the meaning of the Open Meeting Law).

This office has adopted the view that "the congregation of public officials in almost any capacity is readily conceded to be a meeting." Note, The Massachusetts Open Meeting Law, An Historical Overview and Contemporary Analysis, 25 New Eng. L. Rev. 257, 262 (1990). Consistent with the view that the purpose of the law is to "eliminate much of the secrecy surrounding the deliberations and decisions on which public policy is based," Ghiglione v. School Committee of Southbridge, 376 Mass. 70, 72 (1978), we think that the better practice, in keeping with both the letter and the spirit of the law, is to adopt an expansive reading of the open meeting law and to err on the side of caution. Accordingly, we ask that future postings note the presence of both government bodies at the same meeting. Such a procedure has the virtues of informing the public that a second governmental body may be present and minimizing later attempts to reconstruct whether or not a particular incident constituted "deliberation" under the Open Meeting Law. We note that the Attorney General has adopted the same view, as have other District Attorneys' offices. See Harshbarger, Open Meeting Guidelines, p. 8 ("When quorums of two governmental bodies meet jointly, it is a meeting of each governmental body").

I acknowledge the reasonableness of town counsel's contrary view, particularly in the absence of an authoritative court decision. Given that (1) the meeting with the selectman was posted as a selectman's meeting, and was open to the public and press; (2) there is no authoritative court decision on this issue; (3) the town has expressed willingness, which this office appreciates, to post future such meetings as a meeting of both committees, this office declines to seek injunctive relief, and instead considers the matter resolved on the basis set forth above.

Robert C. Cosgrove

Assistant District Attorney

Christianity and capital punishment

Capital punishment and the Christian faith is the subject of an evening's discussion with Horace Seldon, founder of Community Change, Inc., an organization working for racial justice, Tuesday, May 19, at 7:30 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church.

TALK OF THE TOWN

The debate on capital punishment has been very heated at the Statehouse and throughout Massachusetts in the past year and will be a subject of debate in the year ahead as well. The evening's discussion of capital punishment will present an opportunity to reflect on the issue particularly from the point of view of faith. All are welcome to come.

Seldon is particularly suited to lead this discussion. A graduate of Andover Newton Theological Seminary, he is also a member of the Steering Committee of Massachusetts Citizens Against the Death Penalty. This organization last month presented Bernard Cardinal Law with the Herbert and Sara Ehrmann Award. In 1996, Seldon was given a Special Citation by the Boston Police Department. Health Fair support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR,

Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health would like to thank all who helped make our recent Community Health Awareness Day a success. We extend special thanks to the Rotary Club of Cohasset the Pilgrim Co-operative Bank for their generous donations which funded the Bone Mineral Density Screenings. The test was available for both men and women considered at risk for osteoporosis.

Our local Stop & Shop, Atlantic Bagel Co., and Dunkin' Donuts again provided us with wonderful snacks and drinks which helped make the day a very pleasant community event.

Thanks again to all who participated in and those who attended our Annual Health Fair.

Good news about water rates

TO THE EDITOR:

The governor's recent approval of legislation to create a Drinking Water State Revolving Fund is cause for Massachusetts American Water Company customers to celebrate. Significant reduction in water bills will soon occur.

Shortly after taking office in 1995, I began looking for ways to help the residents of North Cohasset to offset the exorbitantly high water rates caused by the revised federal drinking water standards. While nobody was prepared for the 155 percent rate increase that accompanied the opening of Mass. American's $40 million plant, every resident should take time to thank people like Diane Sullivan and Maria Plant who helped organize the North Cohasset water rate protest at the Statehouse. It was your many voices in protest that got the attention of the governor and legislative leadership — you made sure I was heard when fighting to lower the cost of water in North Cohasset.

Fortunately, the language that I drafted to make sure that North Cohasset would be included in this program was adopted. Without the compelling Statehouse testimony of Selectman Merle Brown and Water Commissioner John McNabb it would have been impossible for me to persuade my colleagues to include North Cohasset for relief under this program. Their time and efforts should be applauded by all customers of the Massachusetts American Water Company.

There are others to thank, like Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray, who helped guide this proposal through the House. But not to be forgotten is Edward Teague of the Massachusetts Water Pollution Abatement Trust and Mass. American president Jim Perry, who also deserve credit for their technical assistance and support.

We have been successful in our efforts. Many thanks to all.

Home prices soar as inventory drops are several opinions on the increase, but we are seeing an increase of approximately 10 percent over last year."

It's a sellers' market out there and buyers have the money to purchase expensive homes because of the hot economy and the soaring stock market. But there has been an unexpected side-effect to these good times. There are fewer homes for sale in Cohasset than in previous years. Ford said that at any given time, there are usually 90 to 100 homes for sale in Cohasset. This year, there have been only 40 homes on the market at any given time.

Ford said Realtors aren't necessarily enjoying the full benefit of the increased home values because there are fewer homes for sales. Many buyers are also wary that home values are too high and are reluctant to close on deals.

Houses that are on the market aren't lasting, according to Crowley who notes homes that "are priced fairly are having a short marketing time."

Several other Realtors interviewed for this article declined to participate, but agreed that housing prices are up, million dollar sales are on the rise, and the local stock has declined.

Ford has become something of an historian on the subject of home sales for more than $1 million. He said home sales for more than $1 million tend to pique the public's interest and attract a lot of attention.

The first million-dollar sale in Cohasset occurred in 1985, when the "Cox Estate" on Cohasset Harbor sold to the Yankee Oil Company for $2.6 million. Yankee Oil sold the property to the Roy family in 1989 for $2.99 million.

Between 1988 and 1998, there were 10 homes sold for more than $1 million in Cohasset. The most expensive sale other then the "Cox Estate" came in 1996, when the house at 478 Jerusalem Road, which resembles a castle, was sold for $1.65 million.

According to a recent report on National Public Radio, what is happening in the Cohasset real estate market is taking place state-wide. Experts are saying home prices are up almost 12 percent over last year, with "average" homes selling for about $209,000.

Million dollar homes in Cohasset is a phenomenon that was unthinkable just 20 years ago. In 1971, a new four-bedroom colonial in Cohasset sold for about $70,000. Twelve years later in 1983, that same home was worth $178,000. But by 1987, that home's value had soared to more than $400,000.

Ford estimates that there are currently 100 to 150 homes in Cohasset worth more than $1 million. Nearly every one of these homes is an ocean-front property on Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Ave.nue and everything surrounding Little Harbor and both sides of the Gulf River.

Ford said home values in Cohasset have finally appreciated to the same values just prior to the stock market's sudden drop in 1987. After 1987, home values dropped dramatically because of the weak economy and a full-blown recession. A $400,000 four-bedroom colonial dropped in value to $318,000 by 1991 before stabilizing in value that same year.

Crowley said lots of factors dictate the increased pricing, from condition of the home to its location. "So it's difficult to make an 'across the board' statement," she explained.

Real estate is a supply and demand business, Crowley said, and while many homes are up in price, she too sees less inventory this year. "Our inventory, or the houses available and ready to sell, is more limited this year than it was last year. Corporate transfers are down and many people do not want to leave Cohasset once they move in. We have buyers in our buyer's pool that are ready to purchase homes but less homes have been available."

The higher values, she said, "do not offset the decreased sales volume. We have buyers available and our job is to bring buyers and sellers together."

According to a recent report on National Public Radio, what is happening in the Cohasset real estate market is taking place state-wide. Experts are saying home prices are up almost 12 percent over last year, with "average" homes selling for about $209,000.

Homes values are rising faster than anticipated, resembling the price inflation that occurred in the two years prior to 1987. Ford said he doesn't know if this is an indication of a repeat of events between 1985 and 1987 when home values soared. Investors sometimes purchase expensive homes because houses tend to hold their value over long periods of time.

"You might see people putting their money into homes if the stock market starts tumbling," Ford said. "People with a lot of capital will also take out a mortgage for the tax benefits."

Which is not to say that Ford expects the stock market to tumble anytime soon. He said that home prices are not currently a lot higher than expectations based on historical projection. Ford said he would become concerned only if home prices jump dramatically, similar to what happened in 1986. But that hasn't happened yet. And until it does, the market will remain favorable to sellers by ushering in the age of the million dollar home in Cohasset.

Relay for Life is May 29-30 at CHS track

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

They all have a story to tell.

Some like Eileen Corbett, 226 S. Main St., are cancer survivors.

Others like Ed Lappen, 241 Jerusalem Road, have lost a close friend or family member to the disease.

And still others like Justine Vanderlugt, 344 King St., are grateful no one in their family has cancer and want to help in any way they can.

They and dozens of other local residents will come together May 29-30 to help fight cancer through the second annual 24-hour Relay for Life sponsored by the American Cancer Society at the high school track.

Representatives from the Southeastern Mass. Regional Center of the American Cancer Society briefed team captains Monday on the round-the-clock Cohasset walk expected to raise $35,000.

So far 25 relay teams ranging from eight to 12 members have signed up. Each participant tries to obtain a minimum of $100 in pledges and pays a $5 registration fee which covers the cost of a T-shirt and pancake breakfast, explained Julie A. Carchedi, American Cancer Society regional executive director. Cancer survivors and students are exempt from the registration fee.

The event revolves around team members taking turns walking laps for 24 hours. Registration opens at 3 p.m., Friday, May 29. Opening ceremonies get underway at 7 p.m. followed by the survivors' "Victory Lap." The Luminaria Ceremony, during which hundreds of candles are lit in memory or in honor of those afflicted with cancer, takes place at 9 p.m. Minimum contribution per luminaria is $5.

At 7 a.m. Saturday, walkers are treated to a pancake breakfast which is also open to the public. Extra tickets are $3 each.

Relay laps continue until 2 p.m. when team awards and the closing ceremonies are slated.

"I am willing to do anything and everything to raise money to find a cure."

— Mary Jeanette Murray on the cancer walk

Teams camp out in tents around the track, enjoying a festive atmosphere created by food, music and camaraderie, Cardechi said.

Mary Jeanette Murray of Margin Street said there are few families that have not been touched by cancer and the terrible suffering that goes with it.

"I am willing to do anything and everything to raise money to find a cure," the state representative said.

The money raised supports the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, and service to patients and their families, Cardechi said.

Jody Doyle , 423 S. Main St. said she sponsored a walker last year and decided to go to the track see what it was all about. She was so moved by the Luminaria Ceremony that she is back this year as a full participant.

Hap Pompeo, 11 Ripley Road, said initially he thought it was going to be a somber event.

"But when I see all this enthusiasm, it sounds like fun," he said.

For information on how you can help by participating in or volunteering at the Relay for Life, call Carchedi at the ACS office at 508-584-9600 ext. 232.

Cohasset Travel in Shaw's Plaza off Route 3A is serving as a local information center where participants can pick up registration forms and team packets. Cohasset Travel also has pancake breakfast tickets and luminaria order forms.

GEMS of Hope yard sale

On Saturday, May 16, GEMS of Hope will hold its third annual yard sale from 9 a.m. to noon in the Cohasset Stop and Shop parking lot (rain date Sunday, May 17, 9 a.m. to noon). All proceeds benefit GEMS projects, including funding for the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham, the GEMS-funded school in Pici, Brazil, and microenterprise programs for women in Brazil and Columbia.

Past GEMS yard sales have featured beautiful home-decorating items, including paintings, rugs, furniture and garden ornaments, toys and sports equipment. Come, find that perfect treasure and support GEMS programs, all geared to help women become self-sufficient and build better lives for themselves and their children.

If you'd like to donate items for sale, call Cindy Kuppens at 383-6670.

Car wash for Appalachia

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project is holding three car washes this spring to help raise funds for their 11th annual work project trip. The first one will be held in front of the Second Congregational Church (next to Town Hall) on Saturday, May 16 from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The number of volunteers interested in the project continues to grow. Starting in 1988 with seven teenagers and two adults; this year, for ASP '98 there are 126 volunteers signed on, including 86 teenagers, 8 college students and 32 adults. It's called the Appalachia Miracle! Leaving via 4 coach buses on Saturday, June 27 and returning Sunday, July 5; we will be forming 18 work crews to work on homes in southwestern Virginia.

The two remaining car washes will be May 30 and June 6, also in front of the Second Congregational Church.

'Secret' school chief search to go public

Finalists names to be released May 21

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The hunt for a new school superintendent has been narrowed to five candidates. But the finalists' names will not be aired until May 21 when the superintendent search, which has largely been conducted in secret so far, has to go public.

The search process has been "thorough and inclusive," according to school board member Kathy Ofsthun. Wednesday she predicted the committee's work would produce an "excellent" superintendent. But last week the secrecy appeared to shut the school committee out of the search process temporarily. At the regular meeting Thursday, the board debated the situation for an hour. School board member Mark DeGiacomo appeared stunned to learn the school committee was never supposed to get the names of all the semi-finalists, including the six who were ultimately dropped from consideration. Two other board members agreed with DeGiacomo. Ultimately, the majority on the board voted to request the names and resumes of the six semi-finalists who did not make the final cut. They also elected to hold a "no-names" discussion in open session to hear the reasons the search committee ruled out the six.

But this Monday, the school board reportedly met behind closed doors with the committee formed to spearhead the search for a new superintendent. That was its original plan before schools superintendent Stephen Hart indicated such a meeting might be an open meetings law violation.

"There is no reason under the open meetings law that would allow you to have an executive session," he said. According to Hart, as soon as the candidates finished a screening interview in closed session, the protection of a confidential proceeding was supposed to end. Hart said he would investigate how the board could legally proceed. Ofsthun said Hart concluded the closed-door meeting would be legal after a talk with search consultant James Hardy of the state association of school committees. He also indicated he would post a meeting notice, Ofsthun said.

"This is a school committee decision bottom-line. We're playing a minor role. To what extent can we change that?"

Mark DeGiacomo, school committee member

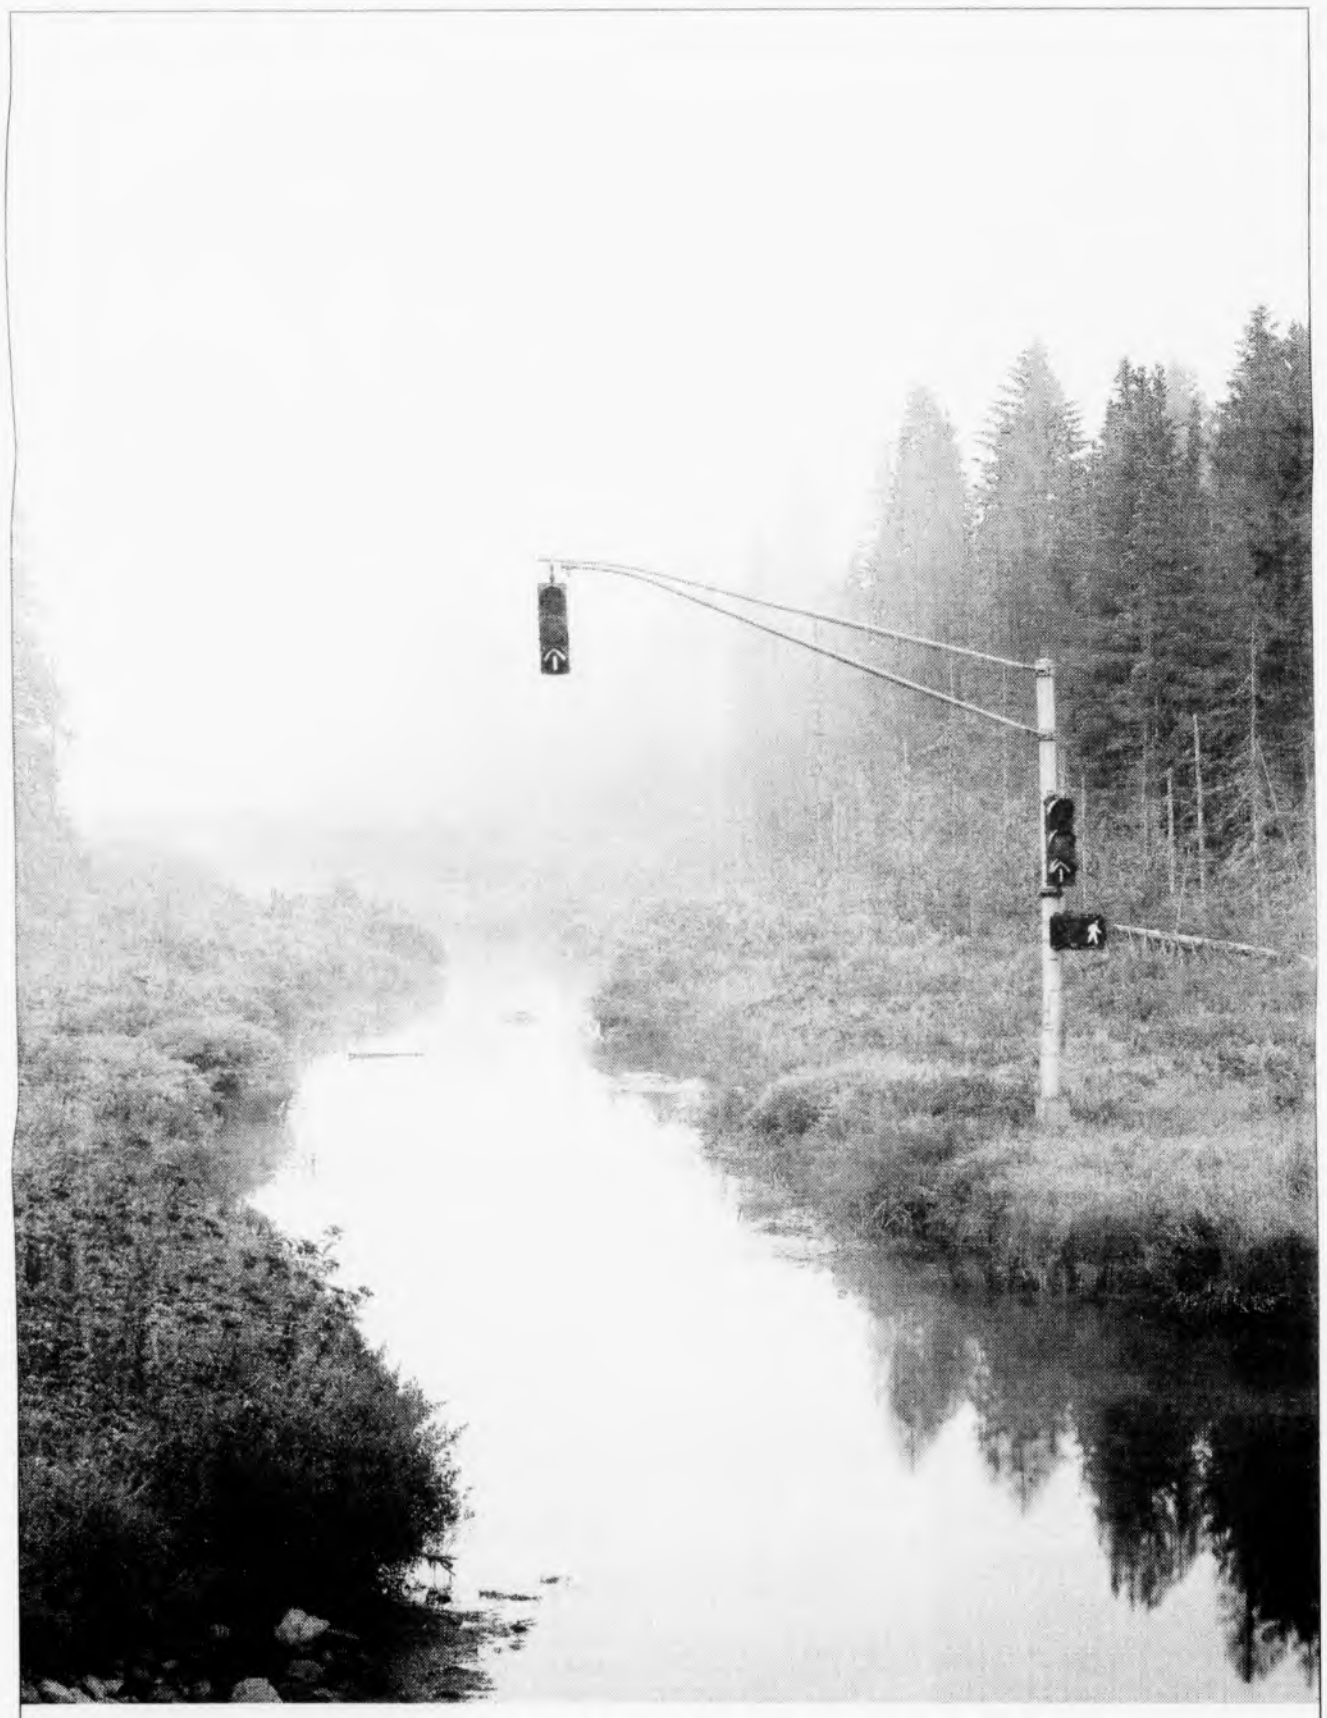
A source said the two boards used the session to communicate the names of the five finalists to the school committee. The source did not say if the meeting's purpose was also to head off a possible disagreement about the selection of the finalists. But Ofsthun said all the board members were satisfied and happy after their conference with the search committee. A major issue at the regular meeting Thursday was the search committee's unexpected decision to interview the 11 semi-finalists in private. Though closed-door interviews had always been a possibility, some school board members said last week they really expected to see the interviews with the public.

"It was intended to be open," Ofsthun said at the regular school committee meeting Thursday. "It is now in executive session. Things have changed."

The change came at the first meeting of the search committee. The panel opted to conduct all the rest of its work in private executive session. The group acted on the advice from Hardy. He advised the group one of the semi-finalists would withdraw if the committee did not keep his name confidential. Two others were undecided if they would continue, should names and interviews go public. Under the circumstances, Hardy said there was no reason to keep the process open.

But the majority of the school board appeared to be uncomfortable with the decision. In an hour-long debate, the board thrashed over some questions about its role in the process.

"This is a school committee decision bottom-line," said DeGiacomo. "We're playing a minor role. To what extent can we change that?"



DeGiacomo, who was elected to the school board after the original decision to go with a search committee, said he had confidence in the search committee's judgment. But he maintained the job of choosing a new superintendent stayed with the school committee.

"This is our responsibility," he said. Ofsthun was the only member of the previous board who agreed with him. Both chairman Rick Shea and school board member Joseph McElroy said they did not feel comfortable adjusting the original arrangement. Moreover, the consultant told Shea "it could be unusual" if the school board inserted itself at this point.

Upcoming school committee agenda

At the May 21 School Committee meeting there will be several topics of interest to parents, students and the community. You are invited to come and share your views on block scheduling at the high school. The committee is gathering information about the new scheduling system in order to evaluate its effectiveness. This forum is offered in addition to a recent survey on block scheduling, sponsored by the School Council. Individuals will be allowed several minutes to share their insights or make a point.

Additionally on the evening's agenda will be a discussion and vote on naming the new school, a presentation by the Superintendent Search Committee to name the finalists, and a continuation of the hearing on school choice. The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. in the audio visual room at the high school. Also, a reminder that the School Committee meetings are broadcast live on Channel 22.

Water commission moving forward with new wells

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission is working on a number of initiatives that could provide the town with several new wells as back-up water supplies.

At the top of the water commission's list are plans to hold the MBTA to a promise to dig new wells near the Greenbush right of way, and to solicit bids for revitalizing inactive well fields at Ellms Meadow and Sohier Street.

Acting in conjunction with the water commission, the Greenbush mitigation committee is requesting that the MBTA fulfill a verbal promise to replace two Sohier Street wells. The water commission is awaiting a reply from MBTA Project Manager Robert Egan. The commission must also receive approval from DEP to drill the new wells at the two sites. Water commissioners hope to complete the construction and upgrade of the new wells by Sept. 15.

"Wells are a good supplemental water source if the plant goes down," said Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. "Right now we have to call Hingham and Scituate for extra water in an emergency. But we should have enough back-up capacity to deal with emergencies on our own."

McNabb pointed out that many water emergencies in Cohasset occur during drought conditions. Hingham and Scituate already have problems producing enough of their own water during droughts.

"We shouldn't build our capacity based on the ability of other towns to supply us with emergency water," McNabb said. "Wells are important so we aren't putting all our eggs in one basket."

McNabb said reopening both well fields could provide the town with 500,000 to 600,000 gallons of water per day. Currently, the water plant is able to produce between 2.1 million and 2.4 million gallons per day. But Cohasset consumes almost 2 million gallons per day during peak usage in July, and the town is growing. McNabb said the town may exceed the plant's maximum capacity within five years.

The well project is part of the water commission's strategy to make sure the town has adequate back-up water supplies. Last year, DEP directed all towns in the state to report on the status of inactive and emergency wells. DEP informed towns that wells that did not fit its minimum criteria for emergency use would have to be upgraded to meet state guidelines or abandoned.

"Wells are a good supplemental water source if the plant goes down. Right now we have to call Hingham and Scituate for extra water in an emergency. But we should have enough back-up capacity to deal with emergencies on our own."

John K. McNabb, Jr., water commissioner

Madelyn Morris of DEP informed the town on Feb. 26 that the Sohier Street wells, which are currently classified as emergency water sources, could not be upgraded to active status because they are too close to the MBTA's Greenbush rail road tracks. The Sohier Street wells are 50 feet from the tracks, but DEP requires a minimum distance of 400 feet. Morris said the wells are in poor shape, and unfit for use as emergency sources. She added that the town could maintain the wells as emergency sources if the water commission upgraded pumping equipment.

The water commission, however, knew the MBTA had made a verbal promise to the mitigation committee to drill new wells on Sohier Street 400 feet from the track if DEP rejected the existing wells. On May 11, Tom Gruber of the mitigation committee formally asked the MBTA to fulfill its promise.

The news was better for an emergency well field the town maintains at Ellms Meadow. Morris said the Ellms Meadow well field could be upgraded from emergency status to active use with minimal DEP permitting and upgraded pumps.

The Ellms Meadow fields were built in 1896 and consist of seven tubular wells with hand-driven pumps. In 1995, the town downgraded the seven wells from active status to emergency status. The wells would have to be tested to see if the pipes are still in usable condition, and the pumps would have to be replaced.

McNabb said the commission is preparing a request for proposals with the help of Tutela Engineering to determine the methods and costs of upgrading both well fields. The commission us expecting the MBTA to pay for the Sohier Street wells. The RFP is expected to cost about $55,000.

Water commissioners are also planning to upgrade the water plant, which is supposed to produce a maximum of three million gallons per day, but can only put out about 2.4 million gallons each day because of worn equipment. McNabb said many components of the plant will need to be replaced, including the huge pumps that pull in raw water.

Everyone knows that we have the biggest and best bagels, but did you know we had the best coffee?

What makes our coffee the best?

It is gourmet coffee, but every coffee house says that. But do they say this? We use only first grade beans that were grown on the best coffee growing estates. The beans are inspected for color, shape and size and only the best are graded first grade quality. The beans are processed in a Certified Kosher Process that uses no animal fats, chemicals, artificial flavors , or additives. Our flavored coffee has only natural flavors. Our decaffeinated coffee is by the Swiss Water Process, most decaf is processed by fats. We use only filtered water. There is not another coffee house in the area that can say all of that. We pay over 50% more than the "standard" gourmet coffee costs and still sell at competitive prices. If you find yourself adding a lot of cream or sugar to your coffee, then there is probably something about the taste that you do not like. Try our coffee black, and taste the best coffee in the world. We offer regular and decaffeinated Expresso, Cappuccino, Cafe Au Lait, and Mochaccino. And, for a limited time, every Wednesday and Thursday we offer 100% estate grown Hawaiian Kona at our regular coffee-of-the-day price. Stop buy and taste the best.

Sandwiches
We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

We do party platters and catering
Party ideas for $50 or less

Community Health Awareness Day a success

On Saturday, May 2, the Social Service League and the Cohasset Board of Health held Community Health Awareness Day at the Second Congregational Church. Free health screenings were available throughout the day. The Rotary Club of Cohasset and the Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank funded the bone mineral density screening for both men and women considered at risk for osteoporosis.

Other free screenings included blood sugar, cholesterol, blood pressure, glaucoma and cataract, hearing, spinal alignment and skin screening, using the skin analyzer machine by the American Cancer Society. Walgreen's Pharmacy provided drug interaction information by their registered pharmacist and there was holistic health information with REIKI and massage demonstrations which were very popular with the participants.

The Tobacco Control Program and the Drug and Alcohol Committee had representatives on hand to speak to parents and children about health issues concerning smoking and alcohol and drug abuse.

Health snacks and drinks were provided by Stop and Shop, Atlantic Bagel Co. and Dunkin' Donuts.

Mothers set sights on new playground

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

A group of Cohasset mothers could not bear the thought of the first day of school with no playground.

The budget for the new elementary school being built off Sohier Street does not include funding for playground equipment — not even a set of swings.

This discovery prompted a group of parents to take the matter into their own hands.

"When the school opens, it needs to be opened with a play structure and swings," said Adrienne MacCarthy, one of the parents raising money to build a playground on the site. "It doesn't have to be the grandest thing. More than 100 kids go out at recess time. I can't imagine having nothing there for them."

The Friends of the New Elementary School Playground — the school has not yet been officially named — have begun a town-wide appeal hoping to raise between $12,300 and $43,800 for playground equipment at the new site.

"To me, it's unconscionable to open an elementary school with no playground," said Jean Muir, a member of the Joseph Osgood school branch of the Cohasset PSO.

The Osgood PSO has agreed to donate $5,000 that it hopes to generate during a three-day book fair this week. The Cohasset PSO has already given the Friends $1,000 in seed money for the project.

To build a simple playground with an eight-seat swing set, a "lava" mega climbing rock, a wishbone slide, a bridge leading to a set of climbing structures and a handicapped-accessible transfer platform, the Friends need to raise $12,300.

From there — due to the structure's modular design — components can be added as more funds are raised, MacCarthy explained. For simplicity, the Friends have divided the project into three phases according to price range.

"More than 100 kids go out at recess time. I can't imagine having nothing there for them."
— ADRIENNE MACCARTHY, PARENT WORKING ON NEW PLAYGROUND.

Completion of the second and third phases — estimated at $23,000 and $43,800 respectively — would expand the playground to include a bridge with moving rungs, a "granite" mega climbing rock, a funnel bridge, a tube slide, a "DNA" climber, spiral slides, chin-up bars, trapeze triangles and a "big foot" slide featuring three slides with waves and bumps.

But the plans are not set in stone. As the project moves along, the people involved may decide against certain components or explore new ones, MacCarthy said.

"These can all be mixed and matched," she said.

The existing playground at the Osgood Elementary School, which was built in 1989, could not feasibly be relocated to the new site, said MacCarthy, also a member of the new school building committee.

The committee examined the nine-year-old playground, which has a life span of 15 years, and decided starting over at the new site would be the safer route, she said. Made of wood and set on pilings, the outdated play structure — with its loosening bolts and splintering body — could be dangerous to children in the not-too-distant future, she pointed out.

"We looked at it and it was no fro[illegible] the beginning," MacCarthy said.

The new state-of-the-art playground, which will occupy a 100-square-foot area next to the school, will be made of stainless steel and plastic and will meet the highest safety standards for all age levels as well as the American with Disabilities Act regulations, she said.

"Playgrounds are much safer than they ever were before. This one will last forever," she said.

The Friends will be launching a fundraising effort this week asking local businesses and residents for financial assistance through letters and an ad in this week's Mariner. In return, donor's names will be placed on a plaque at the playground. They are hoping to raise enough for a deposit on the playground — $5,000 — by the end of May. The playground is slated to open in September along with the new school.

Proceeds from an upcoming Osgood PSO fundraiser will also support the playground project. At Harborfest in June, the PSO will be selling T-shirts celebrating the 70-plus years of the Osgood School, which will close in June..

"This money is strictly for the children, so they can enjoy recess," MacCarthy said.

Osgood School principal Marilee Cantelmo has submitted a grant proposal for $15,000 from Eastern Enterprises in Westwood. That grant would have to be matched by the community in cash and volunteer labor hours, for a total of $30,000. Cantelmo said the company may respond to the proposal by July.

True confessions of a baseball card collector

EXTRA POINTS

DAVID WOLCOTT

I must admit that I was a bit of a wheeler as well as a dealer in my younger days.

I most fondly remember the thrill and satisfaction of getting the big deal done and all the work I put into it from beginning to end. My favorite trade of all-time had to be getting Frank Duffy and Fred Kendell from a rival G.M. for Reggie Jackson, Jim Hunter and Ron Guidry and a bunch of other guys whose only indiscretion was that they wore the uniform of the dreaded Yankees.

Okay, so I was seven-year-old and we're only talking baseball cards here, but chances are it's as close as I'm ever going to get to running a baseball team.

While working on a story about card collecting last week I realized just how much the business had changed since the days of my childhood when every extra penny I had went towards a pack of Topps baseball cards and that world famous stick of bubble gum stuck somewhere in the middle of it all.

These days the gum is long gone (some said it ruined both the cards and your teeth) and so is the era of the 50 cent pack of trading cards. They've gone the way of the set-shot, a good old-fashioned bench-clearing brawl in hockey and leaving your glove in the field at the end of the inning.

I can honestly say that I have not the first clue as to how your average kid can experience those same joys of collecting their favorite cards that I experienced in my youth. The wax pack and gum has been replaced by a fancy-schmancy hologram of some $10 billion ballplayer packaged within some form of a glittery wrapping with a price tag attached that rivals what I paid for my first car.

I'm not bitter, mind you, but yuck!!!!!!

Give me a "boring" photo of Carlton Fisk, helmet in hand, staring intently out at the mound (Topps, circa early 70s) any day of the week over some Ken Griffey hologram that the youngsters crave today.

I can honestly say that I have not the first clue as to how your average kid can experience those same joys of collecting their favorite cards that I experienced in my youth. The wax pack and gum has been replaced by a fancy-schmancy hologram of some $10 billion ballplayer packaged within some form of a glittery wrapping with a price tag attached that rivals what I paid for my first car.

Things were a lot simpler back in my day, when I walked up hill both ways through three feet of snow and a driving rain to get my daily supply of baseball cards.

While that trade I talked about in the beginning of this column would have gotten a regular baseball man put away for a stretch in the real world, it made perfect sense to me at that time and still does today.

It was based on a pair of simple principals: I hate the Yankess and I love my Red Sox. Kendell and Duffy had just come to the hometown team from Cleveland . Thus, I had to be in possession of their cards by any means necessary.

As for giving up Jackson, Hunter and Guidry

Tracksters battle through a rebuilding season

With only three upperclassmen on the roster and the division of the middle school from the high school cutting into his depth, CHS girls' track coach Ron Evans admits that this is going to be a re-building year for his squad.

The Lady Skippers are 2-6 this season.

"The kids are learning a lot this season," said Evans of his very young squad, who hold victories this year over Rockland and Norton. "We only have one senior to go with a pair of juniors and sophomores, so everyone is learning as they go along."

Ashley Ulmer has also put herself into the state competition with a personal best high jump of 4'10.

Where the team is lacking, said Evans, is in depth as well as the distance running events.

"We are not having any less people turn out for the track team, but the middle school kids can no longer compete on the varsity team" since the middle school and the high school were split, said Evans, adding that the distance runners suffer because there is no fall cross country team at the school.

SPORTS WRAP UP

Kristen Reynolds, the senior captain of the team, has been one of the standouts so far this season. Reynolds has been a team leader in the long jump, the triple jump, the low hurdles as well as the 100-meter hurdles.

In addition, Reynolds has qualified for the state competition as part of the CHS relay team along with Tamara DeVaughn and twin freshman sisters Kathleen and Kerry McCarthy.

Kathleen runs the anchor leg for the quartet. She has also placed well in the high hurdle event.

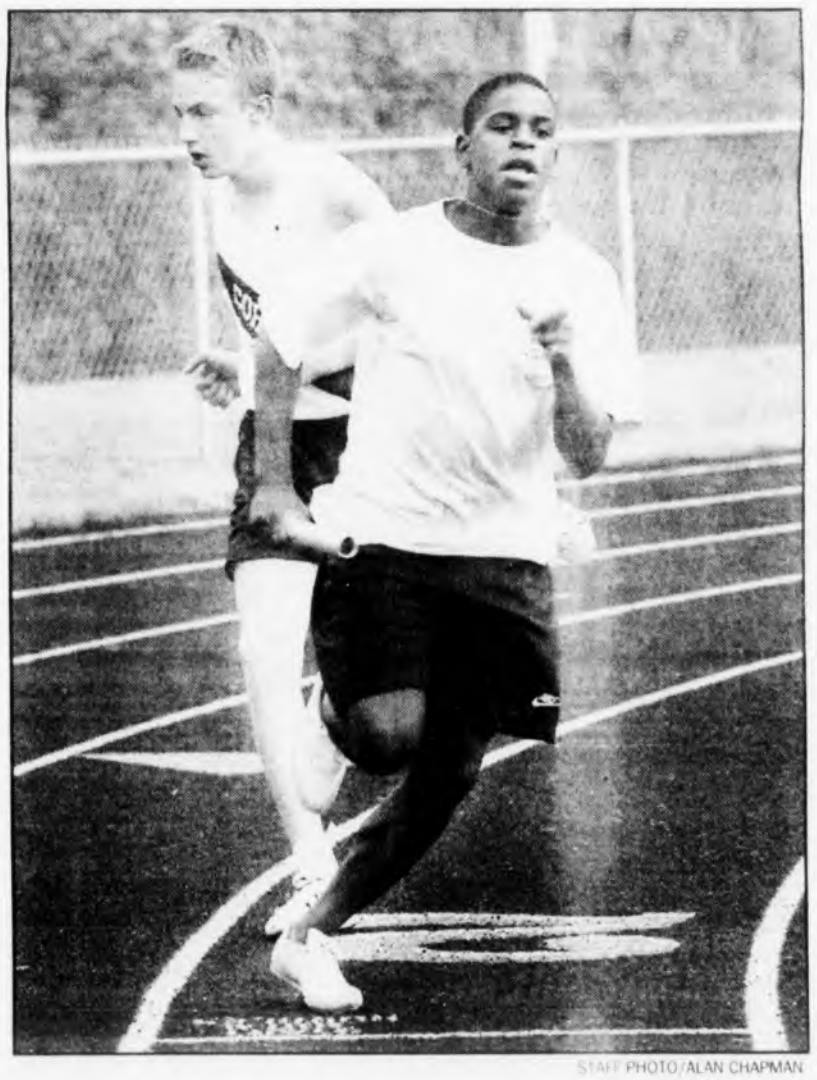
"Tamara has really done well for us this season," added Evans. "She's been strong in the discus and shots as well as in the 100- and 200-meter races."

Other stars so far in the season have included junior Alyssa McNamara, a discus thrower who qualified for state consideration with a javelin heave of 94.9 yards.

Tennis team has their eyes on the touney

South Shore League teams who looked to their schedules at the start of the year and saw an easy match against the CHS boys' tennis team have been in for a big surprise.

Catapulted from their 1-11 record of last year by a squad full of young and energetic legs, the team has posted a 3-4 mark so far and have their eyes set on the .500 mark and making the state tennis tourney.



"This is not the team it was last season," said Roger Tate, who is in his first year as the coach of the team. "It's a matter of maturity. This is a very young team, but it is also loaded with a lot of talent for the game."

Calling this team young is an understatement. The only upperclassman in sight is junior Steve Sceery, an assistant captain who plays first doubles with freshman Heath Heinz.

"The team is just growing as they go along," added Tate. "They may be going up against and those other future hall-of-famers, who cares. They were Yankees and the only reason that I even allowed them to breathe the same air as the rest of my collection was my desire to reach the ultimate in card collecting and obtain the whole set for that particular year.

Never mind the fact that I could probably have put a down payment on a house with all the Yankees cards that I gave away in my youth, it's the principal of the thing.

But I digress. The saddest thing about card collecting today is that kids seem to be missing out on most of the joy associated with the hobby.

They get what the market deems to be a good card and it immediately goes in plastic sheet, never to be touched again.

Whatever happened to playing with the cards? Do you thinks kids today would be caught dead flipping cards with their buddies, hoping that their Reggie Jefferson would get out far enough to cover the Alex Rodriguez they'd been coveting for so long?

How about studying the information the card companies are so kind to put on the back of their product? How cool is it know that Scott Hatteberg batted .277 in Winter Haven in 1991 or that Darren Bragg was a member of Team USA in the 1990 Goodwill Games.

Laugh if you will but I'm pretty sure I learned to read by memorizing those little stats and facts on the backs of the cards. Sadly, I don't see where the young collectors today can experience that same joy.

Charlie Davis earns his place of honor

because of their carefree nature were some of the top track squads on the South Shore, consistently drawing [illegible]wds more normally associated with football games.

And Davis was just as good in the classroom as he was on the athletic field.

"He just seemed to have a way of connecting with each and every kid," said a former student. "Charlie just knew how to get the best out of everyone in his class."

Principal Collins has some similarly kind words about his fellow Marshfield native.

"We are here today to dedicate this track to an excellent track coach. Not only for his records but also for the example he set and the many years of dedication to the students of Cohasset High School," said Collins. "We are here today to show what we did think, and still think, of Charlie Davis.

"He was a superb and caring teacher as well as a loyal friend and just a wonderful man. We are so proud to know that from this day on this facility will be known as the Charles R. Davis Memorial Track."

"It's only appropriate that we attach Charlie's name to this truly excellent facility," said his longtime friend, CHS teacher James Franey. "He really would have loved spending a couple of years coaching the kids on this track."

In front of all three of his children (Kim Tagg, Brian Davis and Glenn Davis) as well as a handful of other family members, four representatives from the current school track squads braved the rain to run a ceremonial lap around the new facility.

With that completed, a rock was unveiled formally dedicating the Charles R. Davis Memorial Track.

Despite some soggy conditions, as a tribute to the department head and athletic coach former colleagues and students would not let a little rain dampen a time to remember Davis through kind words and some humorous anecdotes.

His close friends Collins and Franey were among those who shared some fond, and often humorous, memories of the departed friend.

More than anyone, Franey and Davis truly do share a history together. Classmates and best friends at Abington High School and the best man at each other's weddings, Franey shared a story about how a little extra motivation once turned Davis into a human highlight film on the football field.

"Neither of us were very good, but after a couple of injuries Charlie actually got to play in a game" against the Green Wave's hated rival Rockland, Franey remembered.

"He got in the game and just tore apart the guy on the other side of the line," said Franey with a laugh. "I have never in my life seen such a ferocious attack that Charlie Davis put on that poor man. He was throwing him all around the field."

When Franey cornered his friend and asked him what had brought on this rush of talent, Davis said the answer was simple. He only wished to impress his girlfriend who was sitting in the stands that evening.

"He truly was motivated that day," he added.

Cohasset school superintendent Stephen Hart commented on the number of Davis' former colleagues and students who made their way back to town to be a part of the ceremonies.

"It certainly says a great deal about the quality of person that Charlie Davis was," observed Hart. "He really would be pleased to see all the work that has been done."

Hart also took a moment to thank Cohasset athletic director. Clark Chatterton for his work in putting together all of the details for the dedication ceremony.

A memorial scholarship fund has been set up in the name of the Marie and Charlie Davis. Money is awarded each year to a student at Marshfield High and another at Cohasset High.

Any donations may be made payable to the Charles and Marie Davis Scholarship Fund, c/o Mr. Peter Deftos, Principal, Marshfield High School, 89 Forest St., Marshfield, 02050.

To: Friends and Neighbors,
From: The Friends of the New Elementary School Playground

Teachers, parents and students are eagerly awaiting the 1998 opening of Cohasset's New Elementary School, designed for grades Pre-K through third grade. This innovative school, designed with students in mind, will bring Cohasset's youth into the 21st Century "at the head of the class!"

The new school will be very different from the present Joseph Osgood School. Of course the students will learn the traditional ways with teachers, books...and most recently, computers; but the spaces created for learning have changed. From the beautiful entrance forum area, a large spacious gym and library, to a daylight filled cafeteria which overlooks a hard-top playspace and a proposed custom designed modular play structure.

The New Elementary School was generously funded by a Town of Cohasset bond issue. However, money to complete the playground is still needed. We are asking your help, as a member of the community, to assist us in our fund raising efforts.

All sponsors will receive full recognition on a sponsorship plaque at the playground. To help with your donation, we have set four levels of sponsorship, but any and all donations are greatly appreciated.

The levels of sponsorship are as follows:

Platinum	above $500
Gold	$500
Silver	$250
Bronze	$100

Please make all donations payable to "The Cohasset Public School Playground Fund." Donations can be mailed to: Playground Fund, c/o 143 Pond St., Cohasset, MA 02025, or dropped off at the office of the superintendent. Please keep in mind all donations are tax deductible.

Our thanks in advance for your support of this very worthwhile project. Please feel free to contact any one of us if you have any questions. Be assured that our school will know of your generosity and that the children of Cohasset will appreciate it for years to come.

Sincerely,

Adrienne MacCarthy (383-1028)

'I'm fishing in the rain'

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

Noah, due to a change in the weather I have put the construction of the ark on hold. Please advise if you have a different ides. :) Mark

True to form that blur down Route 3 was Mike Daly. Mike hibernates most of the year in Hingham till he hears the roar of herring leaping the steps of the Bourne fish ladder. He doled over his permit fee and got his fisrt dozen herring of the year. After that it was a career day, every single herring brought in a keeper bass until he ran out. Switching over the lures brought similar luck. Must of had a good school in front of you I commented. Yeah, he smiled, the biggest was a forty incher.

Jeff Peters spent sometime dodging waves at the lighthouse jetty this week. After retreating to the inside jetty he was surprised and pleased to find a keeper amongst the swarms of schoolies. A small Mombo Minnow, an early spring favorite for many, was his lure of choice. Dave Barrow doesn't reveal much about the fishing he is doing except that the keepers are here now. The May monsoon has been putting a crimp in the efforts of many to get out and to get the boats finished for launch.

The channel bell at the mouth of the North River was the destination for another angler seeking anonymity, plenty of cod on the bottom this year was his comment. Other anglers from the Canal report blues to 37 inches mixed in with the stripers traversing the Canal. Hope some of them find their way to this area. Another angler reported slammming the mackerel just inside the H. Buoy. Seems time for them to come crashing in. Break out those diamond jigs and Xmas tree rigs. Time to fill the freezer?

Make time Saturday if you have youngsters twelve and under. The Scituate Rod and Gun Club is hosting its annual Kids Fishing Derby at the pond on the club grounds. Everything is free. If you have a rod and reel bring it with you or pick one up. Hot dogs and soda are provided. Over 300 fish are relaesed in the tiny club pond so it provides excellent odds for the beginning angler. Hooks, bobbers, and bait are provided. Prizes will be provided for the biggest fish and special tagged fish. Participants must be accompanied by and adult. The best spots fill up early in this 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Derby. Bring your camera.

Meanwhile in Norwell, this Saturday the Norwell Recreation Commission will be hosting its Annual Fishing Derby on the waters of Jacob's Pond. Free bobbers, bait and hooks are provided. Call the Norwell Recreation Office for further details.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

Derby Academy summer school starts June 30

Derby Academy announces that its academic summer school is open to all students in grades 2 through 12 and will begin Monday, June 30. Now in its 19th successful year, the program of academic and review courses runs for four weeks through July 25.

All academic summer school courses are taught by qualified and experienced faculty from Derby Academy and other area schools. Each class is limited to 10 students to maximize individual progress. Academic credit for courses may be arranged on an individual basis.

Classes are held in Hingham on the Burditt Avenue campus of Derby Academy. Selections include Study Skills I and II, designed to help students learn and study more effectively and efficiently; Reading and Writing Skills I, II and III, which use high interest material to develop reading skills and comprehension, and practice the clear written expression of ideas; and Math I, II and III, which promote mastery of skills and concepts in a relaxed and supportive environment. A new offering this summer — computer keyboarding and word processing — focuses on two essential skills for today's student.

THERE'S A WARNING LABEL ON CIGARETTE PACKS FOR PEOPLE WHO SMOKE. WHERE SHOULD THE WARNING GO FOR PEOPLE WHO BREATHE?

Exposure to secondhand smoke can increase your risk of heart disease and cancer. At extreme risk are those who work in restaurants where they breathe almost twice as much secondhand smoke as the average office worker. And are 50% more likely to get lung cancer. Since few are in a position to walk away from their job, warnings don't really help. What they need is protection.

The Trustees of Reservations has announced that a guided tour of Miliken Memorial Path at Whitney & Thayer Woods Reservation off Route 3A in Cohasset will be held from 1:30 - 3:30 p.m., Sunday, May 17. The parking area is opposite Sohier Street.

Spend a couple of enjoyable hours with local naturalist Meg Moore as she leads a tour of this woodland garden path. The trail is flanked by native rhododendrons and orchids and is enhanced by an interior garden which was created in the early 1920s by summer resident Mabel Minott Miliken.

Perennial wish list for community center

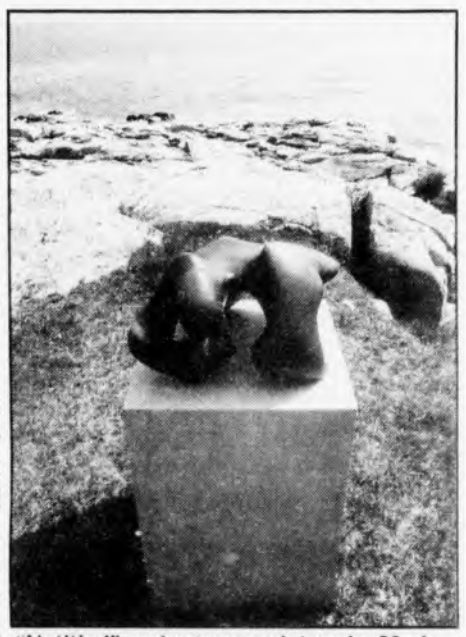
Edvia Yocum admires the perennial border at the South Shore Community Center.



The South Shore Community Center's Friendship Perennial Border, which was begun last year with community donations and volunteer effort, is in bloom and looking lovely! If you haven't done so, take a ride by and see the beautiful plantings which are now in bloom. The Center is seeking further donations of perennials and would gratefully accept any of the following from our "wish list": Purple Coneflower/Enchinacea, both purple and white; Russion Sage; Moonbeam Coreopsis; Foxglove, all varieties; Columbine; Lungwort/Pulmonaria; Wild Geranium, all varieties; Sweet Woodruff flats; Monkshood; Turtlehead, pink and white; Sweet Alyssum flats of white. The Center is very appreciative of all the efforts of those who have contributed to our Friendship Border, and thanks all for their support. Please contact the Center at (781) 383-0088. If you wish to drop off any plants, please call to let the Center know where you will be leaving them or a pickup can be arranged.

Art with a View at Cohasset estates

On Tuesday, May 19, the South Shore Art Center will present a garden tour combining magnificent ocean vistas with sculptural installations and plein air painting. Art with a View is an opportunity to share the inspiration of sculptors and painters on-site at nine secluded Cohasset estates, all with spectacular landscaping and water views.

The tour will begin at the Lightkeeper's Residence overlooking Cohasset Harbor, where refreshments will be served throughout the day and where tickets ordered in advance may be picked up. Shuttle vehicles will be available for those who prefer not to drive their own cars. A boutique offering garden topiaries, gift ensemble baskets and stationery will also be located at the Lightkeeper's Residence.

Art with a View will offer art lovers a rare chance to observe the creation of landscape paintings and to enjoy sculptures installed in private settings of great natural beauty. We have to agree with Henry David Thoreau, who wrote after visiting Cohasset in 1850, "Cohasset Rocks . . . the most perfect seashore that I had seen."

"Untitled" mahogany sculpture by Mark Connolly of Cohasset is one of many works on display during Art with a View.

As a sequel, the South Shore Art Center will host a Fresh Paint Auction Saturday night, June 13, at the Cohasset gallery. This auction will enable collectors to revisit paintings created during "Art with a View" and to make considered decisions in an unhurried and festive atmosphere.

Leo J. Happenny

Leo J. Happenny, 83, of Cohasset, a retired construction engineer for Massport at Logan Airport, died Thursday at Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home.

Mr. Happenny worked 25 years for Massport before his retirement in 1974.

Although he officially retired in 1974, Mr. Happenny loved his job so much he stayed on another two years.

He received many awards and commendations for his work for Massport.

Mr. Happenny was a lifelong resident of Cohasset.

He leaves his wife, Grace M. (Calvi) Happenny and a sister, Kathleen Moriarty of Naples, Fla.

Enthusiastic volunteers take a break to ham it up for the camera during Saturday's food drive.

Middle school kids pitch in at food drive

The Cohasset Food Pantry, managed by Margie Steele, helped to organize 30 volunteers during the annual food drive, sponsored by the U.S. Postal Service.

Seventh- and eighth-graders volunteered at least an hour of their time, and some, two to three hours, to carry, sort and shelve two tons of dry goods under the direction of Cohasset Food Pantry volunteer Bob Thompson. This is the second year that the middle school students have assisted in this major undertaking, amidst other adult volunteers. Thanks to the following young people for their assistance:

The Paul Pratt Library will bring Boston to Cohasset in a new exhibit entitled "Painters of Boston with Ros Farbush." The show, which has been arranged through the South Shore Art Center, will be on display from May 10 until July. The featured group of watercolorists meets in the city for a week each summer to paint with renowned Cohasset artist and instructor Ros Farbush, and includes Elizabeth Burke (Hingham), JoAnne Chittick (Cohasset), Patricia McCarthy (Cohasset), Rod Peterson (Malden), Page Railsback (New York City) and Mary Ann Wall (Marshfield).

With a variety of viewpoints and styles — in watercolor, acrylic, and ink and wash, the colorful works depict favorite cityscapes and landmark buildings from Beacon Hill, South Boston, Back Bay and the South End.

The public is invited to attend an opening reception at the library Sunday, May 17, from 5 to 7 p.m.

Keeping veterans' memories alive

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Tom Wigmore has studied the gravestones of the war dead who hailed from Cohasset. Some bespeak a soldier's life, like the regulation thin white tablets. They are the same size and type used at Arlington National Cemetery where, lined up in row after row, they are the only headstones allowed. Others are family plot markers that show the civilian role of father or son. There are not many headstones of the war dead to read. Only 22 men from all the foreign wars are buried in the town. But their ranks barely

Little League's special day

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The shiny red fire truck led the procession of youngsters in last Saturday's 46th Annual Opening Day of the Cohasset Youth Baseball League.

Rookies and veteran players alike marched down South Main St. in bright uniforms to their destination at the perfectly manicured Harold F. Barnes Field.

It is a scene state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray knows well. Murray, whose father Nate Hurwitz was one of the founders of the league back in 1952 and husband, Phil Murray, served as president. She said the opening day ceremony is one of her favorite events of the year.

"It's a real special day," said Murray.

No second opinion for sewer commission

Request for special town counsel nixed

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen said Monday that town hall is not like the doctor's office.

If sewer commissioners disagree with the diagnosis — they can't get a second opinion, the board said.

The sewer commission is smarting over a recent town counsel ruling that the town manager has the authority over construction contracts. The Cohasset Town Manager Act — which gives the town manager broad powers -was enacted last year.

Commissioners disagree with Town Counsel Paul DeRensis' decision that the authority rests with the town manager and not with them, and asked selectmen for access to special town counsel to investigate further.

What's at stake is the power the sewer commission has over sewer contracts — a role the sewer commission, an elected board, sees as key to its existence as the town gets ready to embark on $20 million in sewer projects.

This week selectmen slammed the door on the commission's request for special town counsel.

"It's (authority issue) been resolved, but just not to your satisfaction," Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said.

But Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said commissioners only seek the means to launch a challenge.

"Without arms, we can't do battle," he said. "We don't agree with it (ruling). So in the name of equity and good will, give us this opportunity."

Guild said he talked to two attorneys with town counsel experience who disagree with

Liquor license proposal gets another round

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Mobil gas station at Sohier Street and Route 3A could soon be selling beer and wine, if selectmen agree to award it a liquor license.

But it's a big if, selectmen said this week.

They were cool to the proposal presented by owner Paul Vercollone because the police chief is against granting the license.

Attorney Richard A. Henderson, representing Vercollone, said it is a franchising concept and Mobil is interested in providing consistency of service. The Cohasset site would be part of a test market, he said. The alcohol, which would be housed in a cooler and on an island, would be concealed on Sundays and during hours when selling liquor is prohibited.

But Selectman Nan Roth pointed out that within a short distance, there is a package store in Cohasset Plaza to the south and just to the north, Joe's Market also sells beer and wine.

"It's a duplication of services in the same neighborhood, I don't see the need in 1/2 mile stretch," she said.

Roth also said in her mind, the quick convenience aspect was disturbing.

"Somehow it seems more encouraging of drinking and driving — to drive in, get your beer and leave," she said.

Vercollone explained the store is not looking to compete with package stores. He said the concept is to provide the alcohol for purely for the convenience of the customer.

"We're not looking for the customer who is having a party and wants a couple of cases," he said.

Vercollone said the store sells ice cream and aspirin but isn't in competition with drug stores or ice cream shops.

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Local haz-mat center dumped

The town dump won't be the site of a permanent collection center for household hazardous wastes after all.

Selectmen learned Monday the town's insurance carrier Great American is unwilling to assume the liability for the exposure.

Therefore, based on this information selectmen rescinded their approval as the host community for the proposed South Shore Regional Refuse Household Hazardous Waste Storage Facility.

Selectmen's approval, granted at their May 4 meeting, was contingent on an OK from town counsel and on assurances having the center would not increase the town's liability insurance payments.

Ambulance billing update

The town billed for 34 ambulance transports last month for a total of $12,981.14. During the same period, $9,465.85 was collected. So far this fiscal year, which ends June 30, the town has billed for $111,664.29 and collected $94,778.07 for ambulance transports. Amounts collected can apply to bills due from prior fiscal years.

Lamberts Lane bus turnaround update

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Cohasset Golf Club cannot grant the size easement required for a regular-sized school bus to turnaround at the end of Lamberts Lane because it is relocating the driving range to that area and needs the land.

"A 100-foot turnaround is needed," Haddad told selectmen.

At the request of concerned parents, the school department voted May 7 to start school bus service on the private way in September contingent on a turnaround being constructed. Schoolchildren previously had to walk down the narrow road with twists and turns to the bus stop on Route 228.

Haddad said there are no laws against the bus backing up but said Police Chief Brian Noonan is against it because it would set a bad precedent.

Selectman Merle Brown explained before the bus can back up, the driver must get out and walk to the rear of the bus to make sure there is nothing behind it.

But Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said despite the obstacles, having the bus backing up is worth pursuing.

"Backing up may not be safe, but it may be preferable (to having children walk along the road)," she said.

Sewer commission invited to forum

Lisa Bumstead, a spokeswoman for Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES), presented selectmen Monday with copies of a May 18 letter inviting sewer commissioners to the group's May 27 sewer symposium at the high school auditorium.

Bumstead said she was out of town last week when it was reported the sewer commission was not asked to sit on the panel, which includes representatives from the capital budget committee and health board.

In the May 14 Cohasset Mariner, Nancy Herlin of CEES, said the town had heard a lot from the sewer commission and that they could attend the forum as members of the audience but would not be on the panel.

CEES planned to discuss the invitation at the sewer commission meeting yesterday after the Mariner went to press.

Bumstead stressed the symposium is not a rallying cry to sewer the entire town but will strictly be an information session.

The sewer commission is planning a "state of the sewer" forum at 7:30 p.m., June 4 at town hall.

Cook is full ConCom member

Selectmen learned Monday that Deborah Cook, 281 King St., has been made a full member of the Conservation Commission. The vacancy was created when Tom Callahan, a commission member, was elected to the board of selectmen. Cook had been serving as an associate member of the commission.

Hillman is congratulated

Selectmen congratulated Robert Hillman, 21 Norfolk Road, Monday on his being made a partner at the Boston law firm Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis Holland & Drachman.

Hillman stepped down recently as chairman of the town's Cable Advisory Committee because his continuing to serve would be a conflict of interest, selectmen said.. Deutsch Williams is the firm serving as town counsel.

Selectmen thanked Hillman for his service and asked anyone interested in serving on the cable committee to contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105.

Right of way blocked off

In a 4-1 vote, selectmen agreed Monday to block off access to the railroad right-of-way at Smith Place.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the right-of-way is being used by delivery trucks and as a driveway. He said no trespassing signs were being ignored.

Saying she wanted the matter looked into more, Selectman Diane Sullivan voted against blocking the right-of-way off. She said residents who abut the right-of-way use it to haul leaves out of their backyards.

Haddad said the would find "the best way" to block it off.

Selectman Merle Brown said the Beechwood Street access to the right-of-way is blocked off with a load of sand.

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor
THE HANDS-ON APPROACH
Prospective patients who would like to establish a high level of communication with their physicians may be interested to know that chiropractic patients consistently claim to be quite satisfied overall with the level of interest shown by their health practitioners. Much of this satisfaction is derived from the hands-on approach that chiropractors take toward healing. The ongoing rapport between patient and chiropractor during the palpation treatment fosters a sense of empathy and trust in the professional relationship. As part of chiropractors' interest in their patients' well-being, they will also inquire about aspects of their patients' lifestyles that may impact their health. All this adds up to a total approach that pleases most patients.
At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are on the leading edge of today's chiropractic technology. Blending art with nature

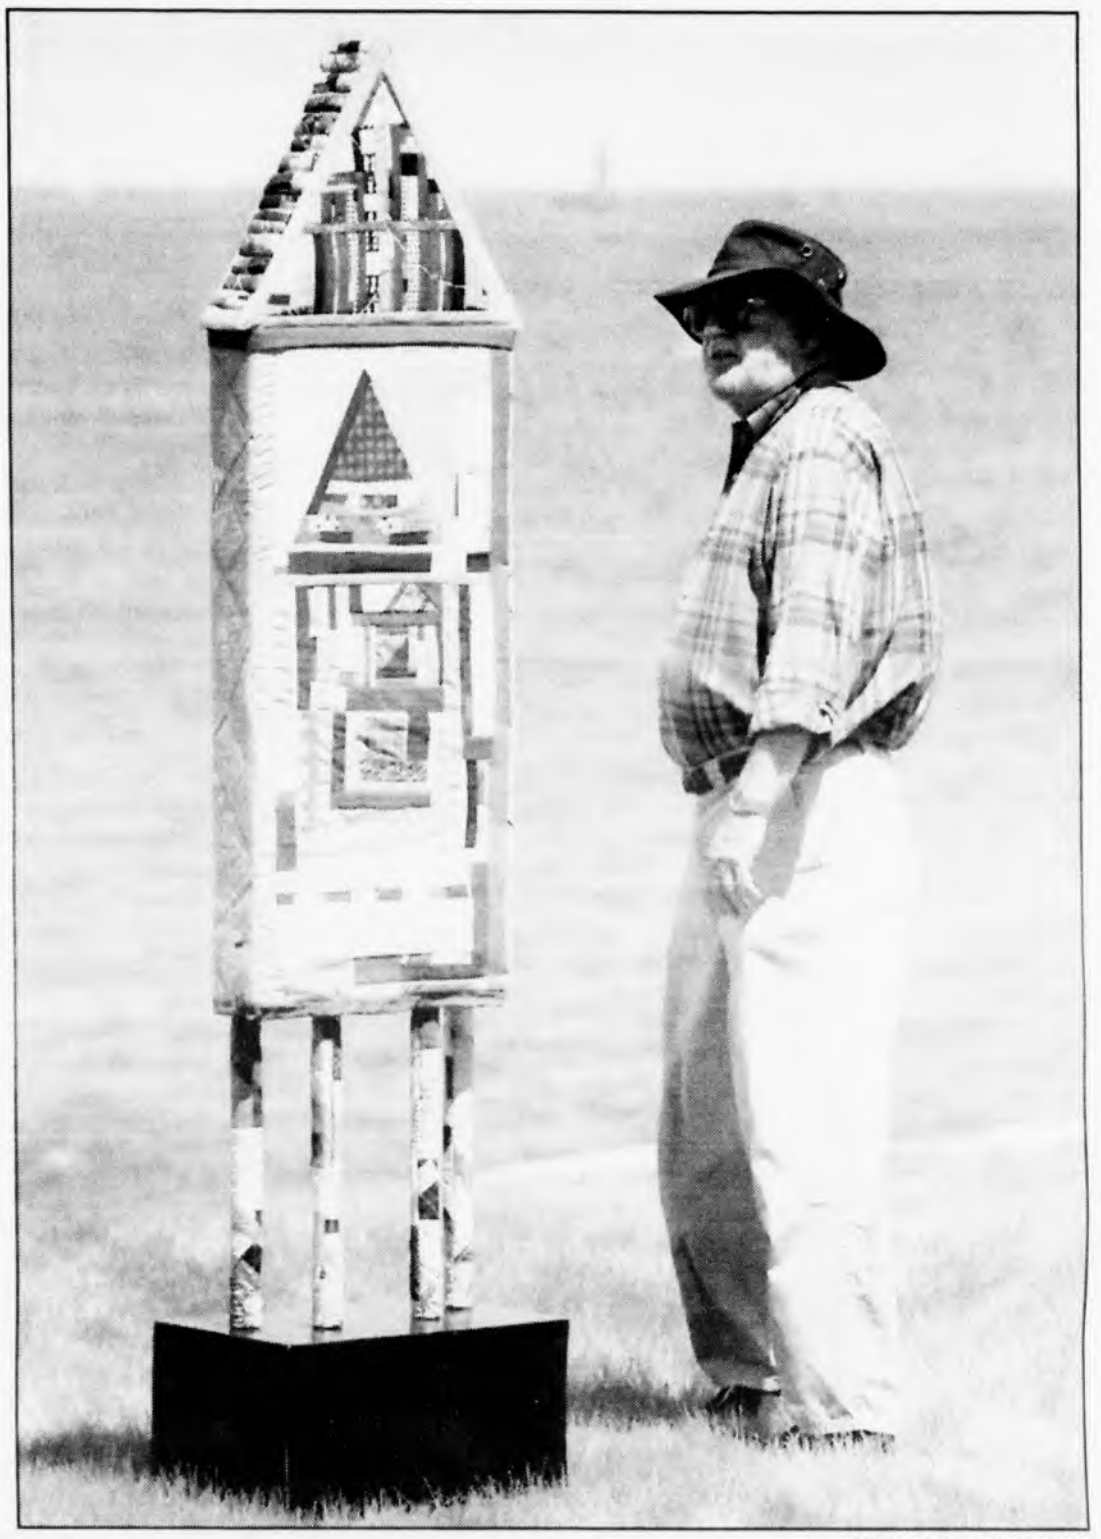
By Mary Kate Shea
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's natural beauty is grounded in rocky shores, intimate harbors, and enclaves of sky piercing pine. Human interpretation of this multifarious landscape channels into individual expression using different mediums.

Combining nature and artistic talent proved a harmonious palette for the South Shore Art Center's first "Art With A View" program held May 19. The fund-raiser, on location at nine ocean or garden view estates, drew several hundred guests, showcased 40 artists painting "en plein air" and unveiled the masterful work of 22 sculptors.

"There are so many beautiful vistas in the town and to see the art coupled with this natural beauty is spectacular."
Suzan Regate, Art Center president

"Art doesn't always have to be within the Art Center's walls," explained SSAC president Suzan Redgate, as she greeted visitors to the grounds of Mary Haggerty's Sandy Beach home. "It's nice to move art out into the community. At the center we have two-dimensional work, painting and photography, but sculpture in its massiveness needs a large space. We also wanted to engage the sculptors in the community."



Looking seaward at calm, sun dappled waves, Redgate added, "There are so many beautiful vistas in the town and to see the art coupled with this natural beauty is spectacular." She pointed guests to "Daphne," a life-size figure by Tara Law Campbell hiding in windswept pines and gazing out to sea. A pine cone wreath circled her head and a branched arm encompassed a bird's nest. The mixed media sculpture was so compelling, Cohasset graphic designer Nancy Garrison chose a photograph of the piece for "Art With A View's" logo.

At the Lightkeepers' Residence overlooking Cohasset Harbor, artists set up easels and squeezed paint onto palettes. Guests enjoyed refreshments and perused a boutique and garden topiaries. SSAC chairperson of special events, Patsy Rabstejnek, busy with ticket sales, said the tour was a sharing of the abundant artistic talent in the area and said proceeds will support educational and cultural programs at the center.

Additional highlights on the tour included the formal Victorian gardens of a Summer Street residence where teacher and artist Patti Gray of Norwell stroked oil on a panel beside peonies and lilac. "There are 100 possibilities in this garden," Gray enthused. "A lot of "plein air" artists work on location and it's fun seeing the artist's interpretation. This is a double pleasure; you see the garden visually and then in the painting."

Admiring Gray's work, guests Aldona Kasper and Ruth Clark from Scituate and Joan McCarthy from Plymouth soaked in the ambiance. "If I had a chair I would sit here the rest of the day and enjoy," McCarthy said. The trio, on a birthday outing, also discovered an innovative sea glass mosaic by Anne Wessman, which sparked a conversation on just what to do with all that sea glass they had at home.

Adding to the treasures littered in unexpected places, a vibrant steel figure by Scituate's Esther Maschio danced into a meadow garden enticing visitors to follow; and plaster heads, created by Lisa Osborn, leaned into granite crevices and rested in flower beds.

On Margin Street at "The Oaks," Scituate artist and Guild of Boston Artists member Sergio Roffo captured a blooming wisteria arbor in oil as Easton sculptor Ken Taylor incorporated an antique hand-forged axle from a horse-drawn wagon with a discarded bulldozer sprocket to create an American version of a Japanese Tori gate. "I see this piece as a ceremonial focal point, central to the faith of some ancient civilization," Taylor said. "I see this work as a universal statement of our need for symbols of permanence and rationale in a chaotic world."

In an unobtrusive corner, a central figure in the founding of the SSAC in 1954, Tom Lucas of Cohasset sketched the formal gardens with quick and accurate strokes. He said he continues to be passionate about art, "because it's the way of life."

On Atlantic Avenue, with a sweeping view of Massachusetts Bay, a shingled three-story boathouse with detached home, designed by architect Julius A. Schweinfurth in the early 1990s, set the scene for sculptures by Mark Connolly Sr. of Cohasset, Ellen Gibson, Ray Sauer and Renee Marcon.

SSAC botanical drawing and painting teacher Sarah Roche of Cohasset brought her Thursday art class, "The Closet Group," along for their second public appearance as "plein air" artists. Tina Watson, Monica McKenney, Gitte Shea, Chris Sida and Susan Cameron, all residents of Cohasset, shared their artistic interpretations with strolling guests.

Further along the coast on a welcoming embankment off Jerusalem Road, Hingham artist Betty Burke landed a coveted spot painting 'the pink house.' The luminous sunlight splaying the home was rendered on canvas by Burke with bold strokes in bright Caribbean hues.

Overlooking Little Harbor, two of the 90 SSAC hosts and hostesses, Don and Vicki Larkin of Scituate, gave tours of Claffy Williams' studio. Don, a retired Weymouth high school art teacher for 30 years, now takes mono print classes at the center. "I now practice what I taught," he said with a laugh. On the grounds, Sculptor Anne Alexander created innovative botanical pieces with birch and applewood and sculptor Janet Hansen presented an interactive screen piece that upon entering rendered a panoramic view.

Tucked away on a Little Harbor peninsula, an estate with rhododendrons, azaleas and double poppies in full bloom, had a mixed media figure with attached telescope in a gazebo by Christopher Hidell. Marshfield artist Joreen Benbenek, working on site said, "I'm capturing the wisteria because it's ready made for the artist, and I like the sun flickering on the gazebo with the tree arching over." Benbenek's style is impressionistic realism and she has studied with marine artist Michael Keane of Hanover. She is also a Copley Master. In front of the home, a spraying copper pipe fountain by Phyllis Ewen, enlivened an aquatic garden swimming with goldfish.

Concluding the tour, guests wandered the grounds of a Beach Street New England farmhouse built in 1825 by Nichols Tower, a master ship builder. The impressionist acrylic painting of Ros Farbush and the detailed, subtle watercolor of Rockland's Becky Halethy depicted different views. Under a grove of towering Norwegian spruce, a gathering of mixed media "Laughing and Standing Crones," by Pam Golden, put the finishing touch on the perfect blend of art and nature.

Evolution of Lobster Lab about to begin at Hagerty site

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The steady pound of hammers and the whine of saws are going to break the silence inside the vacant Hagerty House over the next month. Kevin Ulmer said Wednesday he plans new repairs to make the harbor front house "weather-tight" before the former furniture showroom at 38 Parker Ave. begins its evolution into a Lobster Learning Lab. The process is likely to go slowly. New foundations and shell will positively have to wait until money can be raised. But the architects have orders to draw new plans and apply for permits. Some demolition work inside the house is also probably not far off.

"We finally, after three years, have the lease we need to go forward with the project," Ulmer said Wednesday.

It came almost like an anti-climax last month when the selectmen finally inked the lease for the Lobster Learning Lab. The agreement ended a tangle with the selectmen that lasted three years. Now he is ready to put the controversy in the past.

"It was one of those things," he said. "A long slow uphill battle the whole way. I wish we used the past two and a half years on the building program instead of fighting. But that's behind us."

Against the selectmen's opinion, Ulmer, a scientist and a member of the health board, spearheaded the campaign to turn the house into a marine biology learning and research center. The small white building had been neglected over the years, and the selectmen hoped to tear it down to make room for a boat launch. Ulmer vowed to wage his battle to save Hagerty House until the wrecking ball dropped. Ultimately, Town Meeting nixed the selectmen and adopted his idea for a science center.

The Lightkeepers have about $30,000 in an escrow account for the lab. The money is to be turned over to the Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc. The new corporation, with Kevin Ulmer as the chief, is still forming. Once the Internal Revenue Service approves its non-profit status, the board can go after contributions and grants that will be used primarily for construction.

Ulmer said now that the lease has been inked, the three previously named to the Board of Scientific Overseers have climbed back on board. They are:

- Nobel laureate in medicine Dr. Richard Roberts of Beverly, Mass.;
- Lawrence "Jake" Peirson, the retired associate dean of the joint oceanographic program at Woods Hole and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and
- Dr. Eric Lander, the director of MIT's Whitehead Institute for Human Genome Research.

"They're all still enthusiastic," he said. "People are coming out of the woodwork with offers of help." He expects to add more members to the board by tapping into the pool of local experts.

Ulmer's next steps will be to clear up the organization of the Lobster Learning Lab. The Lightkeepers have about $30,000 in an escrow account for the lab. The money is to be turned over to the Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc. The new corporation, with Ulmer as the chief, is still forming. Once the Internal Revenue Service approves its non-profit status, the board can go after contributions and grants that will be used primarily for construction.

Previously, Ulmer was insistent he needed a 10-year lease to launch a serious fundraising drive. The selectmen offered a two-year lease, renewable up to 10 years. They compromised on a 10-year term when Ulmer agreed to reserve space for public bathrooms "as soon as it becomes feasible."

Keeping veterans' memories alive

suggest the magnitude of their sacrifice.

"They were just kids," he said. "They were 20 years old" when they laid down their lives for their country. In a Memorial Day tradition, 500 flags were planted this week inside Woodside Cemetery. And similar commemorative flags mark the veterans' graves at all the Cohasset burial grounds. Ralph Perroncello and Edward Brennock are the men who lay the flags by the gravesides at the other cemeteries. Perroncello and Brennock are old soldiers themselves. But Wigmore, the man who placed the colors by 500 plots in Woodside, has never himself served in the armed forces. Yet for the past 20 years, first beside his father Steve and then with a few helpers, he has kept alive the memories of the soldiers who preserved the freedoms Americans today enjoy.

"This is my town. It's paying respect to the people who served the country."
Tom Wigmore

Wednesday morning, while birds chirped and the spring wind ruffled the little flags, he pointed out the graves of the veterans he knew personally. The Boston fire chief who answered the call when the Vendome Hotel burned down is remembered with a flag. Wigmore plants flowers beside another headstone for a former Legion commander. The man has no relatives in Cohasset, and there is no one left to decorate his grave except Wigmore.

"They're all my favorites," he shrugged. "It's pretty bad when you walk into Woodside now. You know everybody there. I remember them at the Post. Now you go up and put the flags on their graves. It reminds you how old you are getting to be." Wigmore said he owes the men who went to war. Honoring their memory is a way to show he appreciates their sacrifice.

"This is my town," he said. "It's paying respect to the people who served the country."

Wigmore, now the commander of the Sons of the American Legion, volunteers with the Veterans Administration in Brockton. He revived the local charter for the Sons and is now a candidate for the National Executive Committee. He typifies the commitment of Cohasset families to the armed services, according to veterans' agent Noel Ripley.

"We have one generation that has not seen any military service," he said. "But the Memorial Day parade and the ceremonies are part of the old provincial Cohasset. A lot of people through the generations here have made a lot of sacrifices.

"People should not take that terribly lightly."

Ripley said the parade should be a solemn occasion, a theme Veterans of Foreign Wars commander Ralph Perroncello also sounded.

"It's a somber day here. It's a very somber day. People should realize it's supposed to be a somber day, not a day like you would have a regular parade with clowns and balloons. Memorial Day was formed during the Civil War. It exists to honor the dead of the nation," he said.

Edelman named executive publisher

Robert Edelman has been named executive publisher of Community Newspaper Company's South publishing group, which includes newspapers and Pennysavers on the South Shore and Cape Cod.

The appointment was made last week by Kirk Davis, president of Community Newspaper Company.

Edelman has spent the last three years working for Thomson Newspapers as vice president of sales and marketing for a group of daily and weekly newspapers and several niche products that comprise Thomson's Pennsylvania-Ohio strategic marketing group. Among his duties were responsibility for niche product development and sales training. While there, he successfully launched a new community weekly newspaper along with other niche products.

"Bob is an accomplished publishing executive who has a proven track record in sales management, business planning, marketing and building strong teams," Davis said in announcing the appointment.

"I am excited about the opportunity to return to the Boston area and in particular with Community Newspaper Company's South division newspapers and shoppers. Our weekly community newspapers and shoppers on the South Shore and Cape Cod present readers and advertisers with the best local news, events, features and shopping values," Edelman said. "Our philosophy will be to place a premium on being customer driven as we play an integral part in the communities on the South Shore and Cape Cod."

The Boston College graduate began his publishing career with Harte-Hanks Communications in Brea, Calif., after having spent 10 years in sales management at Johnson & Johnson. From 1986 to 1988, he served as director of sales for major and national accounts for the Harte-Hanks PennySaver group. In 1988, he was promoted to general sales manager and oversaw three major markets where his revenue responsibilities grew. He was named regional vice president of PennySaver operations in 1992.

Edelman joined Pennysaver Publications of Pennsylvania in Pittsburgh in 1992 as vice president and general manager. During that tenure, his company's circulation grew, he restructured outside display and telemarketing advertising operations and launched numerous new products to build on the company's annual sales.

He is a participant in a number of professional management training programs and earned his bachelor's degree in computer science/marketing from BC. He has been active in many trade organizations, including Suburban Newspapers of America, Association of Free Community Newspapers and Newspaper Association of America's New Media Federation.

Robert Edelman

Edelman and his wife, Jane, and their two children, Meghan, 12, and Caitlin, 10, will be relocating to the South Shore from Ohio. He began his new duties on Monday and will be based out of the company's Marshfield site.

Mammography screening is June 6

Although many of the recent reports on mammography have been confusing, the fact is that one women in eight is at risk of breast cancer in her lifetime! The two major risk factors for breast cancer are being female and getting older. Although there is not much you can do to change either risk factor, there is good news!

There will be a Mammography Screening on Saturday, June 6

The Cohasset Social Service League is sponsoring the Mobile Diagnostic Services, Inc. (MDSI) mobile mammography service. Appointments are necessary and can be scheduled by calling the Cohasset Social Service League at (781)383-0711. The mammograms are performed by fully licensed female mammography technologists in a comfortable, private mobile coach. The films are read by board certified radiologists and results are provided to each woman as well as the physician of her choice.

When used in conjunction with the following total breast health plan, mammography is the most reliable method we have now for early detection of breast cancer. There are proven methods for detecting breast cancer early, before it has spread, while it is still treatable. Here is vital information you should know to save a life-your own or a loved one's the three step program to breast health is simple:

- Do monthly breast self-examinations;
- Have a clinical breast exam by your health care professional annually;
- Have a mammogram every year over the age of 40.

Mobile Diagnostic Services, Inc. ACR Accredited, FDA Certified and Massachusetts mobile mammography service, is a not-for-profit corporation with a history of serving women in Massachusetts for over nine years. Mammography is their only business. Because cost and accessibility are cited as major factors discouraging women from having mammography, MDSI provides low-cost mammography on a mobile unit, bringing this life-saving 30 minute examination to women at work sites, health centers and community locations.

Insurance can often cover the cost of a mammogram, and MDSI can bill your insurance company directly, or you may pay on the day of the exam and obtain a receipt for insurance reimbursement. Medicare covers their portion of a mammogram examination every two years. Deductible and co-pay may apply, so you should call Medicare at (800) 882-1228 to check your individual status.

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829

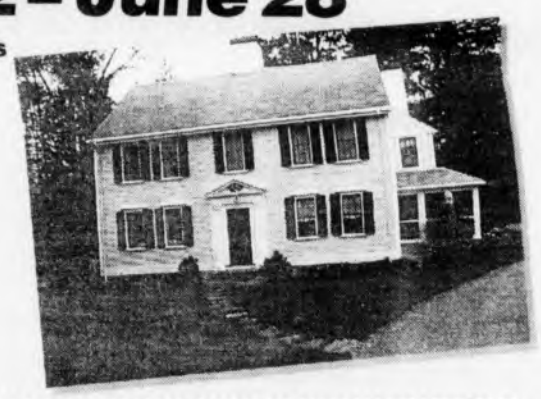
FOURTH GENERATION

I am a fourth generation plumber. "We use toilet water for cologne" is our family motto. My great-grandfather began the family plumbing business before the turn of the twentieth century, working out of a horse-drawn wagon. He fixed windmills and the associated piping, before there was any municipal water supply.

We haven't expanded our horizons much from the times when flushing the toilet was the new technology, but the plumbing trade has provided a decent living for four generations. It seems like everyone in the family is a plumber, was a plumber, or at least worked in the trade for a time. It is a humble trade, but we are all proud of our work.

Great-grandfather was known as Tinker Bailey, because he could fix anything. The story goes...

Thanksgiving morning, 1888, Tinker was fixing the kitchen drain for Becky Cushing. She said, "I heard one of the Bailey Boys is getting married this morning." He replied, "Yes miss, me." "You! My heavens what a preparation!" Old Aunt Sally said that when people heard that story, every one started calling Fred for their plumbing needs, and it was the beginning of the plumbing company.



I grew up with a sense of belonging in my family, my church, my town, and in the business. I don't think many people have that sense of place today.

Grateful for peace

There's no day on our calendar dedicated to celebrating peace. Veterans Day falls on the day World War I ended, and two dates, VE Day and VJ Day, mark the end of World War II. But there is no Peace Day, which means there's no day in which we ritually count off the years since the last war, no day on which we make special efforts to thank those who have brought us another year of peace.

That's unfortunate, because we Americans have a lot of peace to celebrate. The second world war followed the first by just 21 years, but we have managed to avoid a third for 53 years and counting, and with the Cold War over, prospects for a global conflagration seem remote. Holding aside some small skirmishes and the relatively brief and, for America at least, bloodless Gulf War, the United States has stayed out of war since the last choppers left Saigon 23 years ago. In 222 years of American history, it's difficult to find a longer stretch of peace.

The peace we are now enjoying is more than the absence of armed conflict. It is the victory of democracy, which is gaining ground all over the world. It is a peace with prosperity, with living standards rising, especially in parts of the world locked in poverty for centuries. It is a peace sustained by effective institutions of global diplomacy and by the institutions of global commerce and communication. The world marketplace continues to demonstrate that peace and international cooperation are ultimately good for everyone's business.

It is not a peace anyone can take for granted. The five nuclear bombs that shook the earth beneath India this month were enough to rattle even those most optimistic about the inevitability of peace. The current bloodshed in Indonesia reminds us that the road to democracy is rarely peaceful.

If there was a Peace Day, we could pay tribute once a year to those who have helped preserve the peace. We could thank those whose patient and astute diplomacy have kept disagreements from turning into battles. Their work continues today in the Balkans, in the Middle East and, with great promise, in Ireland. We could recognize citizens of all nations who work to turn swords into plowshares.

We may not have a day to celebrate the who, what and when of peace, but we have set aside a special day to think about the why. On the last Monday in May, with prayers, parades and the solemn reading of the rolls of war dead, we show our respect to those who paid the price of others' failure to prevent war. We pay tribute to those who never came home to be parents, workers, and citizens because the world's leaders couldn't resolve disputes without resorting to Clausewitz' definition of war: "diplomacy by other means."

Their sacrifice is not diminished by our desire for peace. They gave their lives to preserve freedom, to protect their country, to help create the more peaceable world we enjoy today. Let us honor them again this Memorial Day, but as we do, let us also thank those who work to promote democracy and justice around the world without adding names to the list of Americans who have fallen in war.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

First day at Osgood recalled

TO THE EDITOR,

The Cohasset Mariner is so a part of my life, that it is read like a bible.

At the present reading, I am very much interested in the Osgood School Closing and its alumni meeting under the tent on the common, which is to take place during the Harborfest Weekend.

I do not need to introduce myself for my children will very well remember me.

Since I have reached 96 years of age, I am now in an assistant living home in Hingham. I keep up with all the Mariner News and am well informed and alert to my town of Cohasset.

I am the Cohasset second and third grade teacher that led a class of 42 or more, one cold February morning in the year 1926 to the new school on Ripley Road. We met at the old school, put our books and pencils in a large paper bag, and started out to a new school, a new room.

As we entered, that big auditorium looked huge to us. We were met by our late principal Helen Brown and led to our second grade class room. My, how small it seemed to me. The new state ruling was 25 pupils to a class, which meant in the future there would be two second grades.

We learned many things that were not in the text books. We appreciated Wild Flowers and grew cultivated flowers. The ocean was at our back door. We saw Poly-Wog's eggs turn into little frogs and we learned phonics and numbers.

We loved our classroom and playground. Class picnics at the end of a school year were happy days.

We christened that school building, the Joseph Osgood School. I hope the new school will turn out equally, if not better students.

When a new wing at the Deer Hill School was completed, I was teaching third grade and we moved to Deer Hill, from there I retired in 1965.

I am happy my life as a Cohasset Teacher will go down in the Memories of Cohasset Schools — 1924-1930 and 1944-1965.

Library is one of a kind

TO THE EDITOR,

From the carpet of its colorful and wonderful children's library to the top of its golden Mackerel vane, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is the crown jewel of Cohasset's buildings. Sitting steps from Cohasset Village, it should never be abandoned. Its lovely muraled rotunda and warmly paneled reading rooms, will never be duplicated anywhere else.

Need more space? Throw another floor on top of the stacks or match the left stack wing with a right stack wing. Parking? In 30 years I've never had a problem parking near the library. Comparisons with towns like Duxbury simply don't wash. Duxbury has double the popluation and so needs more books, more space and more parking.

Thanks for 'A magnificent effort'

TO THE EDITOR:

Once again, on behalf of the Cohasset Food Pantry, I want to thank all those who participated in the townwide food collection by Cohasset Post Office workers Saturday, May 9. This magnificent effort brought more than 4,000 pounds of food and other staples to the Food Pantry, and practically ensures that we will be able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable supplementary supplies during the next several months.

First of all, of course, our thanks go to the carriers and other Post Office workers, headed by Richard Leach, who again organized, advertised and promoted the collection ... all this with the encouragement and support of Postmaster Francine Winters.

Thanks go also to the hundreds of townspeople, who not only remembered the collection date but responded generously with quality products of all kinds. We also appreciate the atten-

Making a name in the music business

Cohasset man has own record label

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

When Jon Durant plays the guitar, something that sounds like a human voice radiates out of the electric box. The Cohasset resident has sculpted a unique reputation in improvisational music since he started his own Alchemy Records label. Alchemy means magic — specifically an enchanted quest to change worthless metals into gold. But Durant, 33, is not delving into alchemy to find a Philosopher's Stone. For him, the word also symbolizes the power of music to transform ordinary things into art. This week he took some time to talk about the nuts and bolts of "progressive instrumental" music and explain why a guitar sometimes is not just a guitar.

"Think about it," he said, laughing off the easy connection to the coveted gold record. "Alchemy is very spiritual." The word came back into vogue in the 1980's when a number of artists put out records with "alchemy" in the title. Durant, 33, also put it in the title of one of his records "just as a joke" and found he tapped into something in his imagination.

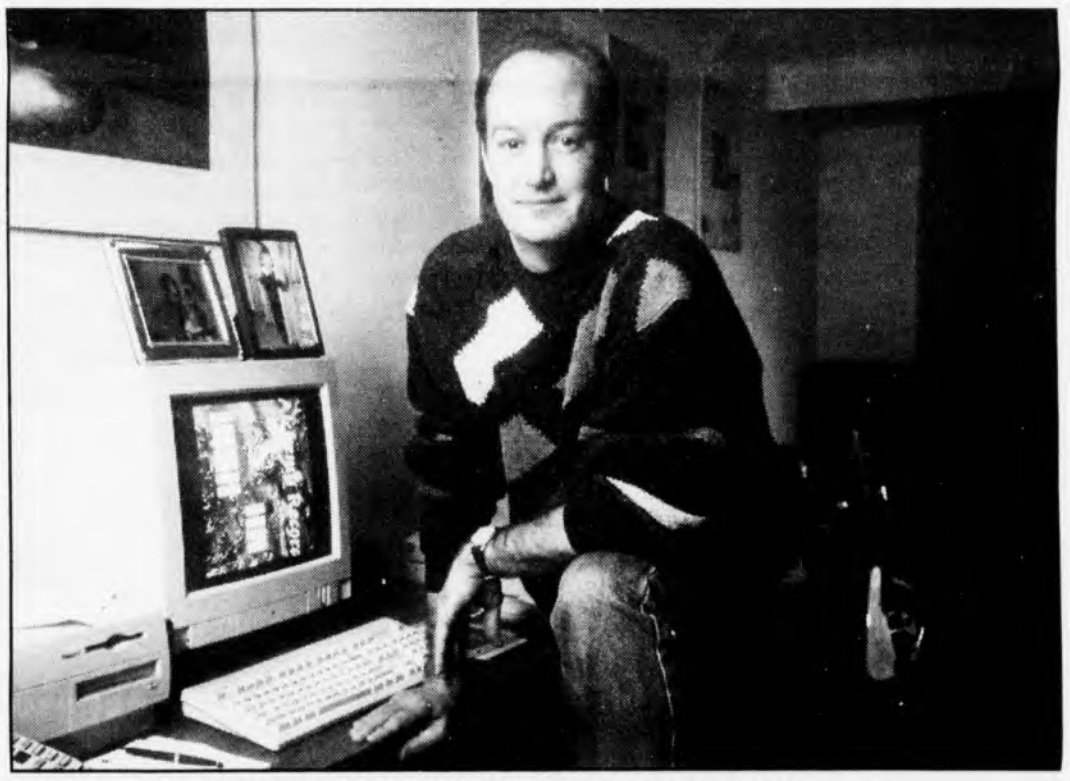
"It just seemed to click," he said because the word put him in touch with the artist's quest "to look inside the self and bring something out. He ended up buying the rights to the Alchemy name and starting a small company that is fast carving out a niche in the music industry. Jazz guitar artists such as Jeff Richman, Leni Stern and Wayne Krantz have recorded on his label. Sure, Wynton Marsalis might trash him if he called his "progressive instrumental" music jazz. But Durant is not buying into the "straight ahead jazz" and the format music much contemporary jazz has become.

"It's a big debate," he said. "Marsalis is self-proclaimed king of jazz and keeper of the flame. He treats jazz much the same as classical music, and he is very influential everywhere. Make no mistake. He's a brilliant, brilliant musician. But innovative things are coming out of jazz community." Some of the most creative artists cannot get their music heard because the market is so wary of the music that did not come out of the formula.

Durant's own music can reach low tones that suggest glass trumpets. He makes suspenseful music with notes that linger and "loop" electronically, and he makes you see images. Later this spring, he will be performing at the Borders book store in the Braintree Mall. The dates are to be announced, but Durant is eager to get in front of a live audience.

He has made an effort to keep his music open to a live performance, though he does manipulate tracks electronically on his CD's. For instance, the guitar tracks are normally not synchronized to his drummer's tempo, and the "cycling" effect would be impossible to recreate in performance. Sometimes he also adds a "lead guitar" track that features some serious picking. He played a little Tuesday while he explained the regular guitar strumming makes a sound that does not really intrigue him.

"Musically, it's not useful for me," he said. "It's not how I hear sound. I hear sound fade in gradually. My approach to sound design with a guitar comes from the early days of synthesizers. Musicians then had to sculpt the sound. They used the controls to alter the attack, the decay, and the release characteristics" of the musical notes per sound waves—meaning how loudly they register, how long they hang in the air and whether they disappear abruptly or fade out. Durant began his study of music early, first with his family, then at Cohasset High followed by the Berkeley College of Music in Boston and Emerson. At Emerson he switched over to advertising and marketing after he realized he could not make a living strictly as an artist. Still, music was always his "calling." When he got the opportunity to start Alchemy Records, he decided it was a chance that might never come his way again.



"There was never a time I didn't fantasize about making records. I grew up on English progressive music, dove into jazz in my early teens and really got into the ECM records label. It really set the tone for what I'm doing here on Alchemy. It had a look, a sensibility that was all very different."
Jon Durant

Durant "sculpts" his sound using electric guitars and a deck of Lexicon processors. The processors, his "secret source," link to foot pedals so he can alter the sound of the music "live." The result is sound "spreading all over," and the particular musical instrument does not really matter anymore. This is the kind of music that he finds exciting, though the commercial market for it is limited. But a small company like Alchemy can stay afloat by using the Web and a toll-free telephone number to deal directly with customers.

"The Web is wide open for the music industry if people can change their mentality about how they get CD's," he said. "Unfortunately, they see it on the Web, and they buy it at Tower Records." Buying direct would put more money in the artists' pockets, he said. Working out of a home studio stocked with music processors and mixing consoles, Durant has found a way to make instrumental music pay. He kept Alchemy Records in Cohasset because it is home.

"I moved here at age four, and there is no where else that I'd rather be. Running a record company today with the Web and faxes, you don't need any specific location to be effective." The manufacturing of a CD is jobbed out to a number of locations anyway, he said. Few of the recordings on the Alchemy label have actually been produced in the Cohasset studio.

Musician Jon Durant operates Alchemy Records out of his Cohasset home.

HEALTH NOTES

Sewers: Pressure vs. Gravity

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health

With the coming of sewers to North Cohasset, it might be useful to catch up on some facts about sewers. Modern sewer systems are the outgrowth of the industrial revolution, and the technology has changed little since 1800 until recently.

In the last decade, to accommodate the staggering increase in population, the healthy treatment of large amounts of wastewater has become a necessity.

In the last decade, to accommodate the staggering increase in population, the healthy treatment of large amounts of wastewater has become a necessity. However, in towns like Cohasset, wastewater treatment could only be done locally by septic systems. Sewers could only be used in places where slopes are gentle and soil is tractable. As diggers and trenchers became more efficient, sewers became more widespread. Still, on streets with ledge and hilly contours, sewers were prohibitively expensive. In the last 20 years, these problems have been largely solved by the development of low pressure systems. These systems are contour following and gravity independent. They are ideal for sewering hilly, rocky, terrain with high water tables.

North Cohasset will have a pressure system. Homeowners with septics which met state Title 5 requirements, were given the option not to hook up to the sewer. About 10 homes were in this category and were exempted from hookup. In the future, if these systems fail, they can hook up to the sewer.

Compare the diameters of pressure and gravity sewer pipes

All other homeowners on the sewer line must connect to the sewer when it is complete. Call the sewer commission to find out more about the timetable if your home is affected.

When connecting to the sewer, homeowners with septic systems in good condition will have several options:

- use the septic tank for overflow in the event of a power failure
- use the septic tank to handle groundwater or runoff from storm drains.

Call the Board of Health for assistance with your plans for your old septic system; it may be useful for groundwater management on your property.

Newtonville: a study in water management

Newtonville, a small vale off Atlantic Avenue, has a special problem. Most of the homes on this private way were built by one owner at about the turn of the century for his family. The surface water drainage system put in at that time has failed, and runoff remains as standing water. This means that several septic systems are under water and create a health hazard. A pressure sewer is planned for four homes in this location, and is expected to be in place by the end of the summer. In the meantime, the residents of Newtonville all share some responsibility for correcting the groundwater situation. Otherwise, it may be necessary for a number of the homes in Newtonville to resort to tight tanks until the sewer is in place.

Save big on septic maintenance

Just a few items of septic system care can save big expenses. The board of health office at town hall has a list of guidelines for maintaining a septic system in good condition. Ask for "Your Septic System, A Reference Guide for Homeowners."

tion given to the collection by the newspapers.

For those unfamiliar with the project, the carriers brought the food to the Post Office where it was weighed. Other volunteers there, notably many teens doing public service, sorted the articles and helped bring them to the Pantry in the basement of the Second Congregational Church, where they were stored and shelved. This part of the operation was directed efficiently by my associates Bob and Jean Thompson.

A need continues for the services of the Food Pantry, with an increasing number of elderly being helped. For the Pantry's clients and workers, I want to thank all who had a part in this major collection.

Purpose of Web Site clarified

TO THE EDITOR,

Back on Track representative Bill Grimes' observation that Greenbushhotline.com is "preaching to the choir" illustrates a lack of understanding about web sites.

A web site is as much a voice "of" the people as it is a voice "to" the people.

The primary audience for Greenbushhotline.com is not South Shore residents, rather the web site's objective is to direct South Shore resident's opinion to our elected officials and other decision makers at both the state and federal level.

If Greenbush is to be judged on its merits, we intend to make those merits, or lack thereof, abundantly clear, especially to those who are committed to reducing at-grade crossings and preventing diesel locomotives from spewing harmful emissions into American communities.

In the past, whenever the federal government has intervened in the Greenbush controversy, the voice of reason has prevailed. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers insistence that the regional office of the EPA provide air quality data on Greenbush is one example. Another is the U.S District Court's refusal to dismiss Hingham's lawsuit against the MBTA.

Grimes points out that this same court will decide the fate of Greenbush one way or another. His assumption, however, that a ruling in favor of the MBTA will insure that Greenbush will succeed is wrong. Other important issues remain and it is these issues the web site will continue to resonate.

No second opinion for sewer commission

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis' decision.

"No one wants to go to court," Guild said. "We don't want to be adversarial on this. We want to sit down together to see what mutually satisfactory agreements can be resolved. We need a legal professional to study this, to give his opinion. All I want is your authority to get a counsel."

The question initially arose over who has the authority to terminate a contract. The sewer commission did not want part of the north Cohasset project, known as Contract 2, terminated but selectmen did. The result was conflicting letters to the contractor.

Although that matter is now moot because the contractor would not extend his pricing, Guild said going forward, sewer commissioners need the "authority" question over the granting and terminating of contracts resolved.

> "The sewer commission will not let the matter rest here."
> Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild

Guild pointed to a clause in the Town Manager Act which states the sewer commission shall be "responsible for its facilities" as evidence the commission has power "to select and to designate for award bidders on sewer projects."

Without access to special town counsel, the sewer commission will take matters into its own hands, Guild said.

"The sewer commission will not let the matter rest here," he said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan moved the board allow the sewer commission the assistance of special town counsel. Her motion failed for lack of a second.

Liquor license proposal gets another round

"People are not driving there for those things," he said.

In a memo to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan urged the board reject the request.

He said in the past 16 months, the police department has responded to Verc Mobil 72 times. Of those, 26 were disturbance calls regarding youths gathering and causing problems. Noonan said there were several instances when the clerk was distracted by one person while another stole items. In addition, numerous motorists have driven off without paying for gas at the self-service pump.

Vercollone said while "drive-offs" are common in the industry the Cohasset location has less than the average. He explained the disturbance calls to police were generated by the Mobil station when two or more cars of youths turned up.

"One car is not a problem, but when the second car pulls up, we go out and ask them to leave," he said. "The reason we do this (call police) is we don't want to become a place where people congregate."

Vercollone recalled only one incident requiring police response when a girl stole a lottery ticket while the clerk was distracted.

Selectman Tom Callahan said he was concerned about adequate staffing during later hours.

The station is open 24 hours but is seeking to sell from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Selectmen have the right to modify those hours.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she was not in favor of granting the license.

But selectmen decided to continue the hearing until June 15.

"I'm not in favor of it unless there is a change of heart from the police department," Roth said.

Correction

R. Murray Campbell was incorrectly identified as president of The Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc. in the attribution following his signature in a letter to the editor Mr. Campbell wrote last week. Mr. Campbell is president of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation which had initially planned to sponsor the Lobster Lab. The Lobster Lab is now the project of a new organization, The Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc. of which Kevin Ulmer is president. The Mariner regrets any confusion the error may have caused.

St. Anthony's parish center is approved

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church won't have to worry about overcrowded religious classes and a lack of gathering space much longer. The zoning board of appeals (ZBA) has issued two special permits , one for the building and one for parking, approving plans by the church to build a 10,500-square-foot parish near Sankey Lane. The church faces Summer Street. The architecture of the new center will match the brick building currently on the site.

It is unknown when construction will begin or how long the project will take to reach completion. The pastor of the church, Reverend John Mulvehill, did not return telephone calls to The Mariner.

Church officials say the parish center is needed to accommodate increased membership at St. Anthony's, and to provide classrooms for religious classes. On a typical weekend, more than 1,200 people attend four masses. The new building will add eight classrooms, an office, additional storage space and a reception hall to the existing church.

Teachers currently hold religious classes for 565 students in teachers' homes, the rectory, the church basement, and other rooms in the church including the "crying" room in the back of the building. Classes are held on weekday mornings, Saturday nights, and Sunday mornings. With the new classrooms, church officials plan to hold religious classes primarily Monday through Thursday afternoons during the school year, and also in the evening on Sunday and Monday.

Church leaders plan to use the hall for wedding receptions and other church functions. The 2,352-square-foot hall will accommodate 160 diners or 336 seats for assemblies. Functions will include parish breakfasts and suppers, gatherings after religious services, committee meetings, wedding receptions, and Christian doctrine assemblies.

Functions will include parish breakfasts and suppers, gatherings after religious services, committee meetings, wedding receptions, and Christian doctrine assemblies.

Any wedding reception or gathering must be finished by 11 p.m. according to one of the conditions of the special permit. The ZBA did not approve a proposed gazebo and terrace requested in the plan. Zoning board members agreed with neighbors that a gazebo would encourage wedding parties to gather outside on nice days and create a lot of noise.

Neighbors had also been worried that the building would exacerbate serious flooding and drainage problems in the area. But a report by ZBA consultant John Modzelewski of Civil Designs Inc. indicated that the project could actually decrease flooding in the area.. Modzelewski's report stated that the church's drainage plan would increase water runoff from rainstorms, but the excess water would be directed away from abutters' homes and into a nearby wetland which drains to Jacob's Meadow.

The parish center will increase the lot coverage on the 4.7 acre site from 34.5 percent to 40 percent. The church is in a residential zone, which has a maximum allowable lot coverage of 30 percent. Zoning board members agreed that the church is a unique use in that zone.

The ZBA issued a second permit allowing the church to maintain its current 136 parking spaces. Church officials said activities at the parish center and church services usually would be held at different times. In a ruling written by Barbara Power, ZBA members agreed that there are enough parking spaces to service the church and the parish center.

"The Board notes that the available parking space at St. Anthony's in Cohasset is generous in comparison to parking at other churches in town," Power wrote. "The Board believes the imposition of any further parking requirements upon the applicant would compromise the space available for the proposed parish center without any measurable benefit to the neighborhood."

The current 51,650-square-foot parking area accounts for 25 percent of the lot coverage at the Church's site.

Trustees close book on Pratt building

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Library trustees are convinced that the Paul Pratt library cannot be expanded at its current site.

Describing the decision of abandoning the building as "an emotional one", trustees chairman Patience Towle said the town facilities study made them face reality.

"We met last week with (the consultant conducting the study) and he communicated to us with facts and in a non-excited manner the reality of our situation," she said.

The trustees think any money would be better spent on a detailed analysis of the Osgood School site for possible use as a library rather than any further study of the Paul Pratt Library building.

In a memo, approved by the trustees at their meeting Saturday morning, to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the trustees ask the Request for Proposal for reuse of the Osgood School include:

- about 14,000 square feet of the Ripley Road level of the Osgood School be reserved as a new location for the library;
- parking space for about 70 cars be provided in close proximity to the building's cener entrance on Ripley Road;
- space be provided for vehicular drop-off at the building's front entrance;
- there be space surrounding the building to permit deliveries and traffic in and out to serve the library;
- other uses for the property be compatible neighbors of the library.
- or sufficient area to build a 14,000-square foot library plus parking be provided on available land at the Osgood School property.

The trustees will also ask Haddad for money for a feasibility study of Osgood estimated to cost about $25,000. They hope to have the feasibility study completed by October's special town meeting which they hope would appropriate funds to proceed with construction drawings.

"The biggest opposition will come from those who think the library is just dandy the way it is."
Sheila Evans, library trustee

Trustee Sheila Evans said selling the idea of a new library won't be an easy one.

"The biggest opposition will come from those who think the library is just dandy the way it is," Evans said.

But the current library is woefully inadequate to meet the needs of the 21st century, Evans said.

She explained cars and computers have made the much-loved building inadequate for the town's current and future needs.

The purpose of the town study was to identify the nature and cost for each building of projects related to building maintenance and to improved conformity to the Massachusetts Architectural Access Code, Evans said.

She said it would cost about $470,000 to improve access at the Paul Pratt Library. Expenditures include eliminating platforms on the children's level and installing an elevator and two more bathrooms per floor. Replacing all the windows to improve energy efficiency would cost about $120,000.

Expansion possibilities including squaring off the southeast and northwest corners of the building but this would add only 2,000 square feet of the 4,000 square feet needed. Any expansion would trigger the need for more parking to conform to the town's zoning laws. Additional parking is estimated to cost about $260,000 not including acquiring about 1/3 acre from abutters on each side.

"After the expenditure of well over $1 million, if this plan would work, the space provided would be neither enough nor efficiently organized, and would merely defer the obvious — that Cohasset needs a new library," the library long range planning committee wrote in its report.

Lack of accessibility to handicapped patrons or staff to much of the building, too few bookshelves, no meeting room and no floor space for expansion of computer use are some of the general difficulties with the current building, trustees said.

Town takes CHL to court on May 28

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Town officials will take the owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to Quincy District Court on May 28 to face a criminal complaint for defying a shut-down order issued by Building Inspector Robert Egan. Last month, the zoning board of appeals (ZBA) upheld a decision by Egan to shut down CHL for a permit violation. CHL-owners Paul and John Barry had appealed Egan's decision, but the ZBA rejected the Barry's appeal. Despite the shut-down order, CHL remains open and the Barry's have initiated a lawsuit against the town to overturn the shut-down order.

The town has responded to CHL's lawsuit in a written reply to the court. Attorney Daniel R. Deutsch wrote the reply, which asks the court to dismiss CHL's lawsuit because the claims are "frivolous and are made in bad faith." Deutsch has also asked the court to reject CHL's claims under the legal doctrine of "unclean hands."

Previously, CHL attorney Anton Moehrke has pointed out that the owners of the landfill are trying to work with environmental authorities regarding the extra material in the landfill. Moehrke has also stated that the owners of CHL would continue to exercise their legal right to appeal any attempt by the town to shut-down the landfill.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group, SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), said he is pleased that the town has filed the criminal complaint. But McNabb is concerned that the complaint would result in nothing more than a "slap on the wrist" and a fine that the owners of CHL could easily afford to pay.

McNabb said he believes the landfill should also be closed because it is at its maximum allowable height of 190-feet. McNabb admitted he has not measured the landfill, but said CHL's own records of the amount of material accepted imply that the landfill has to be higher than its legal height

However, in April the health board discovered that there was as much as 100,000 tons of material on the slopes of the landfill in violation of DEP regulations. DEP regulates the angle of the slope of the sides of the landfill to ensure that the material stays in place without creating a landslide.

Egan has also ordered CHL to remove 7,800 square feet of material it placed in a section of the facility not authorized for landfilling.

McNabb discovered the 7,800 square feet of overfill last November. He also discovered the permit violation last January when he found that CHL had never filed its special permit to operate a landfill in Cohasset with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. State law requires permits to be filed with the registry before becoming effective.

Part of the landfill sits in the town's Water Resource District, created in 1988. Landfills are prohibited from the district except for facilities that were in legal operation before the creation of the district. Egan ruled that CHL's failure to file the special permit meant it wasn't in lawful operation prior to the creation of the water district and could not claim special pre-existing use status. The zoning board upheld Egan's decision, technically shutting down the landfill for good.

The health board will meet with CHL in June to discuss the removal of the overfill and the material on the slopes. McNabb said he will attend the hearing and urge the health board to rescind CHL's site assignment allowing it to operate a landfill in Cohasset.

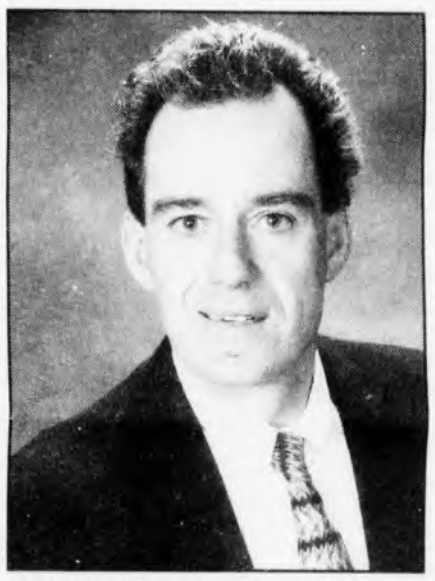
BUSINESS NOTES



Local businessman honored

Michael D. Savage, vice president, BankBoston, N.A., Canton, has been named the 1998 Financial Services Advocate of the Year for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, according to Patrick K. McGowan, New England Regional Administrator for the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Savage was selected by the Massachusetts Small Business Administration Advisory Council from nominations received from various banks, Chambers of Commerce, trade associations and individuals. The award is presented annually to an individual who assists small businesses in obtaining financing, either directly or through advocacy efforts to increase the availability of financial services.

Savage has been employed as a commercial banker since 1972. Since 1987, he has concentrated his efforts towards helping smaller businesses that historically have had difficulty accessing capital with reasonable terms and conditions. His expertise is in small business lending and, in particular, the many federal and state credit enhancement programs. He is the key person responsible for BankBoston's highly successful Credit Enhancement Unit.

Savage continually volunteers his time to make presentations to small business owners seeking loan information such as SCORE workshops, Newton Continuing Education classes, and the Small Business Resource Center in Chelsea.

Plays by the Sea presents 'Into the Woods'

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

The woods can have a surprising effect on even the most familiar situations.

The Cohasset Plays by the Sea upcoming production "Into the Woods" by Stephen Sondheim takes the lives of traditional fairy tale characters — Cinderella, Jack (and the Beanstock), Little Red Ridinghood, Rapunzel, Snow White and Sleeping Beauty — and turns them upside down.

"Today, a lot of musicals are just fun and games. But this play makes you think," said director Ron Nicynski, 17.

The curtain goes up on "Into the Woods" Friday, June 5, and Saturday, June 6, at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, June 7, at 2 p.m. at the Cohasset High School auditorium.

Ron describes the first act of the play — which focuses on the fairy tales as they are commonly known — as the "happily ever after" children are accustomed to. By the end of first act, all the characters have the wish that has been driving the stories of their lives.

But the second act tells the story of what happens after the "happily ever after," Ron explained. Contrary to what traditional fairy tales would have people believe, none of the characters are happy, he said.

"Everyone you thought as a child was a good guy isn't in this show. Most of them are greedy and backstabbing," Ron said. "This show has guts. It has what you wouldn't expect. Not everyone is what they appear to be. You need to pay attention."

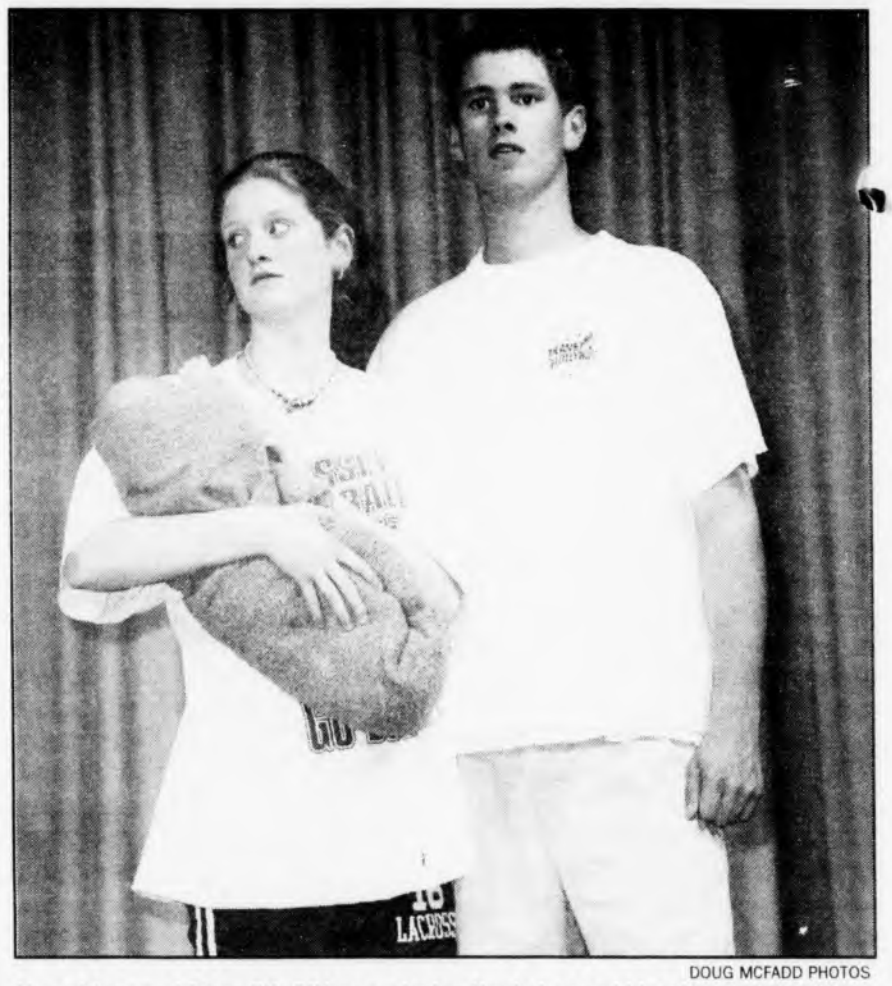
Unexpected plot twists along with clever comedy — plus a dash of tragedy mixed in — and moving musical numbers make "Into the Woods" just the type of play Ron had in mind when he selected the show for his third directorial effort.

Ron remembers seeing the show — which starred Bernadette Peters — on stage as a child.

"I remember liking the show but not really appreciating it," he recalled.

Teaching his cast to make the audience appreciate the shows he directs has always been his goal. Rehearsals, which began in March, consist not only of practicing lines and learning music but also concentrate on understanding dialogue and characters' motivation, Ron explained.

"It's a really good experience and a challenging play," said Sera Genovese, 13, who plays the part of Little Red Ridinghood's Grandmother. "There are so many different characters, it's not really one play. It's a whole bunch of fairy tales mixed in together. Everyone has something to do."



Cohasset Plays by the Sea, a drama troupe that has existed since fall of 1996, has performed two other musicals this year, "The Wizard of Oz" and "Annie." Both shows sold out.

The cast of the first production featured only thespians in grades four through six. For "Annie," the program expanded to include the seventh and eighth grades.

The actors and actresses in the upcoming performance range from sixth grade to twelfth grade.

"It's all ranges of ages. The younger kids have to put more work into it and everyone's trying to work together," said Clara Sceery, 15, who plays Sleeping Beauty.

As the troupe nears the end of its second season, Sharon Weber — who founded Cohasset Plays by the Sea — finds herself concerned about the future of the theatrical venture.

DOUG MCFADD PHOTOS

Ryan Story and Meredith O'Hayre, playing the baker and his wife, find that life isn't so wonderful "happily ever after."

"The goal was to create a vehicle for kids to develop skills and attitudes and knowledge and confidences that are non-competitive," said Weber. "It's an opportunity to explore more of themselves than comes up on the playing field or in the classroom."

But those opportunities might come to an end if more parents and children don't take leadership roles in the group soon, she said.

While Ron directs the plays, Weber directs what she calls the offbeat projects, including an on-location video production of "Anne of Green Gables" last spring and a creative choreography project called "Original Beat," which will be performed May 29.

Next year, Ron will graduate and the student director slot will be open. Weber said she would like to see another parent step forward to assume her role in the near future. The sooner new people get involved, the more time she and Ron will have to work with them to keep the momentum of the group flowing, she said.

Cast members in "Into the Woods" include Brian Krupczak, Ali Kinchla, Ryan Story, Merdith O'Hayre, Mareth Colins-Wooley, David Ingber, Katie Roche, Marisa Mello, Meredith Bates, Grace Gardner, Caroline Carr, Krista Nicynski, Jim O'-Sullivan, Bill Kearney, Alex Russell, Ryan Long, Sera Genovese, Sean Conte, Liz Ingber, Joseph Nicynski and Clara Sceery. Katie Buckley is the music director. Janet Campbell is the choreographer and Sarah Roche, DeeDee Nicynski and Liz Bates are the producers.

Advance tickets for the show are available at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Cohasset Hardware, Cohasset High School, Deer Hill School, Osgood School or by calling Irene Barry at 383-1605.

Cohasset and Barnstable players get into a scramble Friday evening at the jamboree celebrating the tenth anniversary of lacrosse at Cohasset High. The Skippers would get by their opponents in overtime.

Jamboree celebrates 10 years of CHS lacrosse

The Cohasset Middle and High School Lacrosse Programs and the entire Cohasset Lacrosse community have a lot to be proud of this week. On Friday, May 15, on the tenth anniversary of lacrosse in Cohasset, two of the three school teams and the two fifth-sixth grade town teams (who stepped in to fill a spot on the field when the Middle School game was canceled) outperformed themselves before bleachers full of delighted fans.

With playful blue and white balloons bobbing in the spring breeze, two energetic Cohasset junior teams coached this season by Chuck Jaffe and Bob Inman opened the day, putting unbeaten records on the line.

Cohasset Blue controlled the first quarter and opened a two-goal lead on scores from Jake Previte and Michael Devine, both assisted by Paul Digan. But the momentum shifted in the second quarter as Cohasset White reeled off six unanswered goals, scored by five different players. Michael Rasmussen picked up two goals in that run.

The teams traded goals in the third quarter, with Previte netting again for the Blue squad, Chris Simms, seeing his first action in the goal all season, made several key stops down the stretch to help the Blue have a chance to crawl back into it.

Two late goals, however, were not enough and the White team came away with 9-6 win. Goals were collected by Privite (3), Devine (2), and Andrew O'Keefe for the Blue team. For White, Rasmussen (2), Mike Ernst (2), Mark Davis, Garrett Curran, Jon Grimm, Greg Smith and Tim Pilczak fired them in.

Assists came from Digan (3), and Mike Hajjar for Blue, and by Jonathan Littauer and Malcom Stansell for White. In the net, Pilczak had five saves, and Simms had six for Blue, while Nick Murphy had 10 for White.

The teams played for sprints, winner running as many sprints as there were goals, and losers running twice that. As the women's varsity team assembled for their game against Walpole, the juniors were seen across the field doing their post game sprints, leg lifts and push-ups, while a crowd of amazed fans wondered how these small powerhouses could still move after their action-packed game.

When their turn came, Cohasset Women's Lacrosse team, coached by Nicole Mladenoff played to their full potential in a game that ended in a 7-6 Walpole win, with the decisive goal scored in the last minute of play.

Clear, concise passes and excellent defense made this game the best the team has played this season. With a 2-0 lead in the first five minutes of the game, the girls were off to a great start.

Determined to score goals, they had thirty shots on Revel's goalie, Christine Buckley who interfered with their plans for victory.

Caitlin Donovan, Jenny Chastain and senior tri-captain Ali Kinchla got the defense with 3,2 and 1 goal respectively. Walpole's attack was also in full force with leading scorer Sue Black scoring 4 goals, including the tie breaker.

Cohasset's defense was intense in this powerful and emotional game, with coverpoint Caitlin Stansell playing an incredible game. working together to keep the ball out of the goal. Emily Libby, Caitlin O'Neill, Carolyn Cameron, Ali Kinchla and Jackie Kahn on defense kept the ball in Cohasset possession for a good part of the game. freshman goalie Clara Sceery had 13 outstanding saves, playing her individual best of the season.

Friends band together to help fight ALS

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Both Richard Kennedy and Martin Levenson will tell you that they are just trying to make the best out of a bad situation.

One's a family friend and the other a proud older brother and the two boyhood friends are bonded by the loss of Jimmy Kennedy to ALS (Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis), also commonly known as Lou Gehrig's Disease.

Gone from this earth for more than a year now, friends and family will come together in the memory of Jimmy at a memorial road race/walk through the streets of his hometown of Quincy on June 13.

ALS, for which there is no known cause or cure, attacks the neurons that transmit messages to muscles throughout the body which eventually causes the muscles to lose strength and die.

Levenson said victims have compared the disease to "taking part in your own funeral" since the mind is still very much aware while the body is falling apart.

"You'd look into his eyes while he was starting to fade away and you knew that the old Jimmy was right there trying to get out," said Levenson. "To watch him deteriorate because of this disease was just devastating but through it all he never gave up.

"To the end he was always Jimmy. He handled it like a trooper."

"You'd look into his eyes while he was starting to fade away and you knew that the old Jimmy was right there trying to get out," said Levenson. "To watch him deteriorate because of this disease was just devastating but through it all he never gave up.
Martin Levenson

More than just a gathering to remember the life that he had lived, all proceeds from the event will go to the Angels Fund at Massachusetts General Hospital for ALS research.

The day is shaping up to be quite a happening. Styled as a "family event", in addition to the run (five miles) and the walk (2.5 miles), there will be refreshments donated by a number of businesses as well as a raffle and one special incentive for the runners to finish the race.

Every finisher will have their name put into a large bowl. From there one name will be drawn and the winner will receive a pair of round-trip airline tickets to anywhere in the country.

And don't be surprised to see more than one or two familiar faces around the refreshment tent. Some local dignitaries expected at the event include former Boston Mayor Ray Flynn, Speaker of the House Thomas Finneran, former Governor Michael Dukakis as well as Attorney General Scott Harshbarger.

At first blush, if Jimmy Kennedy didn't seem have it all he certainly was a good portion of the way there.

An outstanding track athlete as well as a scholar at Quincy High, Kennedy would go on to graduate with high honors from Northeastern and then Georgetown Law School.

Cohasset Skippers look to end year on a high note

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORERSPONDENT

With their postseason hopes dashed by an inexplicable and seemingly endless midseason losing streak, the Cohasset High School baseball team continues to battle. Carrying a 6-13 record into tomorrow's final game, against Norwell, Coach Knurek's squad hopes to end on a positive note.

The Skippers were eliminated last Thursday with a loss to undefeated South Shore League champ Hanover. The game was a hard-fought one, as the Skippers hung tight at 3 until the sixth, when the Indians posted four more to win 9-3.

Knurek drew up a pitching-by-committee plan before the game and it worked for five innings. Ben Ketchum was relieved in the second by Jim O'Sullivan, who was replaced in the fourth by Pat Hurley, who was pulled in the sixth for Sean Parkinson.

Overall, it was a fine performance by an overworked pitching staff facing arguably the most feared line-up in the SSL, but nonetheless, Cohasset had been mathematically eliminated from post-season play.

Following the Hanover loss, with no pressure to qualify for the tourney, the Skippers took a road trip to Nantucket for the weekend. After leaving school early Friday, the Skippers were ferried to Nantucket and practiced briefly before an evening in Nantucket village.

Fueled by dinner at the alluring Tacos Tacos taco hut, the team then played a 20-inning intrasquad game of wiffle ball home run derby into the wee hours of the morning.

The first game of the doubleheader was yet another gut-wrenching loss. Facing a pitcher with a biting curveball, the Skippers mustered eight runs, but came up one short in the end. After allowing a four run Nantucket first, the visitors settled down for two innings, but committed a whopping six errors, virtually throwing the game away. However, there was one bright spot, as first baseman Story collected his first varsity hit, slashing a low pitch into leftfield, then followed it up two innings later, hitting virtually the same pitch even harder to left. Story also got it done in the field, making several key plays at first. He even helped save a run when he slowed a sharply hit ground ball and sprinted back to the bag to take the throw from Mike Rossi hustling over from second base.

Despite these heroics, Cohasset still fell to the Whalers.

The second game was similar, as the Skippers allowed their hosts an early lead, then struggled to come back. Nantucket jumped out to a 5-0 edge and Cohasset fought back valiantly, but the Whalers made the big plays when it counted and triumphed 7-6. Captain Greg Taylor led the boys in blue with a pair of two-baggers and third baseman All Schwerin knocked in two runs. But again, it wasn't enough, as Cohasset dropped to 5-13 .

However, Cohasset rebounded Monday when they hosted the Hull Pirates. Having dropped their first game against the neighboring rival, Cohasset came back strong, on the arm of Ketchum. The right-hander spun a seven-inning gem, with masterful control of the strike zone and excellent use of his entire repertoire. Despite fanning only three, Ketchum allowed only four hits.

Once again backed by inconsistent fielding (three errors), he got big plays from Rossi, rightfielder Chris Pratt, as well as Schwerin, Taylor and first baseman Joe Pergola. Pratt's was the play of the game, as the sophomore snagged a harshly sinking and tailing line drive in Hull's fifth innings.

Ketchum's 4-3 win was the best game he'd pitched since a Hull game two years earlier. In ninth grade, then playing for the junior varsity, Ketchum had thrown a no-hitter against Hull's JV. This time, he was helped by solid hitting from Taylor, who drove home Ketchum, and Pergola, who tripled to bring home Taylor and Schwerin.

Although the Skippers have had their tournament hopes quashed by a cruel series of arm injuries, bad bounces, and just plain old poor baseball, they continue to play hard. Hurley is the only graduating player, and he is helping the younger players set the tone for next year's edition. With just one game left, Norwell, the Skippers hope to boost their record and start sending the message that next year will be different.

Little League's special day

"The field always looks beautiful and the kids love it. It's a Norman Rockwell scene and a special place for the kids."

The opening day ceremonies were postponed from an earlier date because of rain but bright sunshine and a warm breeze greeted this year's crop of more than 150 players.

Murray threw out the first pitch as the event's special guest. Every year memories keep flowing back to opening days of yesteryear. She has kept close tabs with the league since 1958. This year had special meaning for her as two of her grandchildren, Jenny and Ben Curley, began their rookie seasons on the baseball diamond.

The Deer Hill School band led off the ceremony with the national anthem. The one sour aspect of the morning was that the American flag, which normally hangs from the pole beyond the center field fence, was stolen sometime overnight. Several parents and league officials were disgusted that someone would steal the flag in the first place. Murray found it to be a big disappointment.

"I was disappointed, as everyone was, that the flag wasn't there," she said. "If someone thought it was a prank, it was no prank."

But even the absence of Old Glory couldn't ruin the positive atmosphere of the morning. The electronic scoreboard down the right-field line was running perfectly and the concession stand behind home plate was busy all morning with league volunteers serving up refreshments for the fans who took in the ceremony in the bleachers.

Murray threw out the first ball, but it won't be the last time she visits the field this season. "I like to pull in and watch the kids play for 15 minutes or so on my way home from Boston."

As for next season, Murray is looking forward to taking part in the opening day festivities.

"I hope they keep asking me because I love it," Murray said. "I used to take some swings at the end of tryouts when my own kids were playing. A few of the kids would hang around afterward and pitch to me.

"I'll let you know I put a few over the fence."

There should be plenty of balls sailing over the fence at Harold F. Barnes Field this season.

Jimmy's friends band together to help fight ALS

Kennedy children, he was working at a Washington D.C. law firm when his wife, Karen, informed him that she was carrying their first child, Trevor, who's now 4-year's-old.

It was also during that time frame that Jimmy started showing the first noticeable signs of the disease that would eventually take his life at the age of 31.

"When you think about it, this is the ultimate in horrible irony," said Kennedy. "When our dad (Chris) got sick with ALS in 1989, Jimmy was the one who moved back into the house and tried to help keep everything together. He was still in college and had the most time of all the kids."

"He saw the devastation of what this did to a loved one and then only a few years later he had to go through the same thing himself," added Kennedy.

"Jimmy had everything. A great job, great family and a kid on the way. It was a wonderful life, but it was too short."

Researchers have discovered that some 10 to 20 percent of the ALS cases are considered to be hereditary in nature.

After his brother's death, Kennedy, a Cohasset resident who operates a chain of chiropractic centers in Boston with another brother (John), and Danvers resident Levenson decided to try to do something in Jimmy's memory.

A little fact-finding brought out what was needed the most: cold hard cash to help advance ALS research.

Enter the idea of a road race, which they intend to make an annual community event.

"The idea of a race in Jimmy's memory fit like a glove," said Levenson. "We were all avid runners and something like this really brings the people out in support. The outpouring from people while we have been putting this together has been just tremendous.

"We are determined to make this event something both special and different."

Originally they hoped to attract about 500 participants and raise in the neighborhood of $20,000 with all of the proceeds going to ALS research.

Well guess what. The neighborhood is a lot richer than expected. With the addition of such groups as the L-Street Runners as well as the Boston Athletic Association, Kennedy said there may be as many as 1,500 people signed up by race day.

"I've been involved in charity events over the Christmas holidays with my business so I knew we could be successful if we did it the right way," said Kennedy. "The business allows me some incredible connections."

It was some of those same connections that made Jimmy's final days a little more enjoyable with a special trip to the 1996 Summer Olympic Games in Atlanta.

The family was able to come up with tickets for the last day of the track and field competition at the Games. From there the Kennedy's were then offered first class plane tickets, a hotel suite as well as their own personal bus for the duration of their stay in Atlanta.

Best yet, Jimmy was able to have an extended private audience with 1964 Olympian Billy Mills.

"That man is a living saint as far as I'm concerned,' said Kennedy of the gold medal winning runner. "I recognized him in the crowd and asked if he would mind coming and meeting Jimmy for a second. Billy came up and spent a couple of hours with us. He was just unbelievable."

For more information on the event, please call Richard Kennedy at (781) 383-6008.

Donations can be sent to Kennedy at 5 Norman Todd Lane, Cohasset, MA 02025. Checks should be made payable to the Jimmy Kennedy Memorial Run for ALS.

Diamond girls make their last stand against Hull

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

As it stands right now, the CHS softball team may have taken the field for the final time for the foreseeable future Monday afternoon as when squared off against the Hull Pirates.

Playing strictly a junior varsity schedule for this season, there is no funding in the upcoming school budget at this time to field a team for next season at any level at the high school.

"Things always could change, but right now there are no plans to field a softball team for next year," said head coach Mike Gill, who has been at the helm of the Skippers for over a decade.

"It's kind of a sad occasion," he added. "Cohasset High has had a softball program for as long as anyone can remember, but now it's going to be gone."

The hockey team went in similar direction this past winter when they played strictly a sub-varsity schedule, but they are expected to once again field a varsity squad this winter. At present, all indications are that the softball program will not be afforded the same luxury come next season.

On the field, the team has had an outstanding season, going into the Hull contest with an impressive 9-5 mark, Senior co-captains Kelly Tufts and Lauren Dooley have been the leaders of the Skipper attack this season both at the bat and in the field.

"Kelly really is a bulldog out there on the mound. She's quite the competitor," said Gill of his pitcher. "No matter what she always wants the ball."

Tufts has indeed got the ball a lot in her four years on the varsity team. She pitched every inning of each game her sophomore year and was on her way to accomplishing that feat again this year as she went into the Hull contest.

Dooley, a three year starter on the varsity level, has been just as important to the cause, said Gill.

"She's settled in nicely at shortstop and hits very well at the top of the order," said Gill.. "She's got some very nice speed and has a great glove to go with it."

Dooley and Tufts were the only seniors on the team this year, which featured only one junior and then eight other underclassmen.

Other members on the team included Merideth Ronan Danielle Kupsc, Jen Meehan, Stephanie Cook, Sarah Kidder, Katherine Ronan, Kellie Straughn, Megan Waal and Megan Cox..

Jamboree celebrates 10 years of CHS lacrosse

dent during this game. Every player gave all they had, playing a phenomenal game and demonstrating skill, fine abilities and good sportsmanship. There are now four games to go, (Marshfield 5/19, Newton South 5/22, Barnstable 5/26 and Martha's Vineyard 5/27, the last two at home) the girls are ready for the next challenge.

As the sun slid lower, and the lights shone on Alumni Filed, the men's Varsity squad coached by Mike Falvey, prepared to face the formidable Barnstable Red Raiders, a team with only one loss in their season prior to this game.

by now the bleachers were filling up with the Skipper's classmates, parents, alumni home from college, young families composed of newly converted fans who had come to see the youth squad play and stayed on, townsfolk, and a wonderful assortment of spectators.

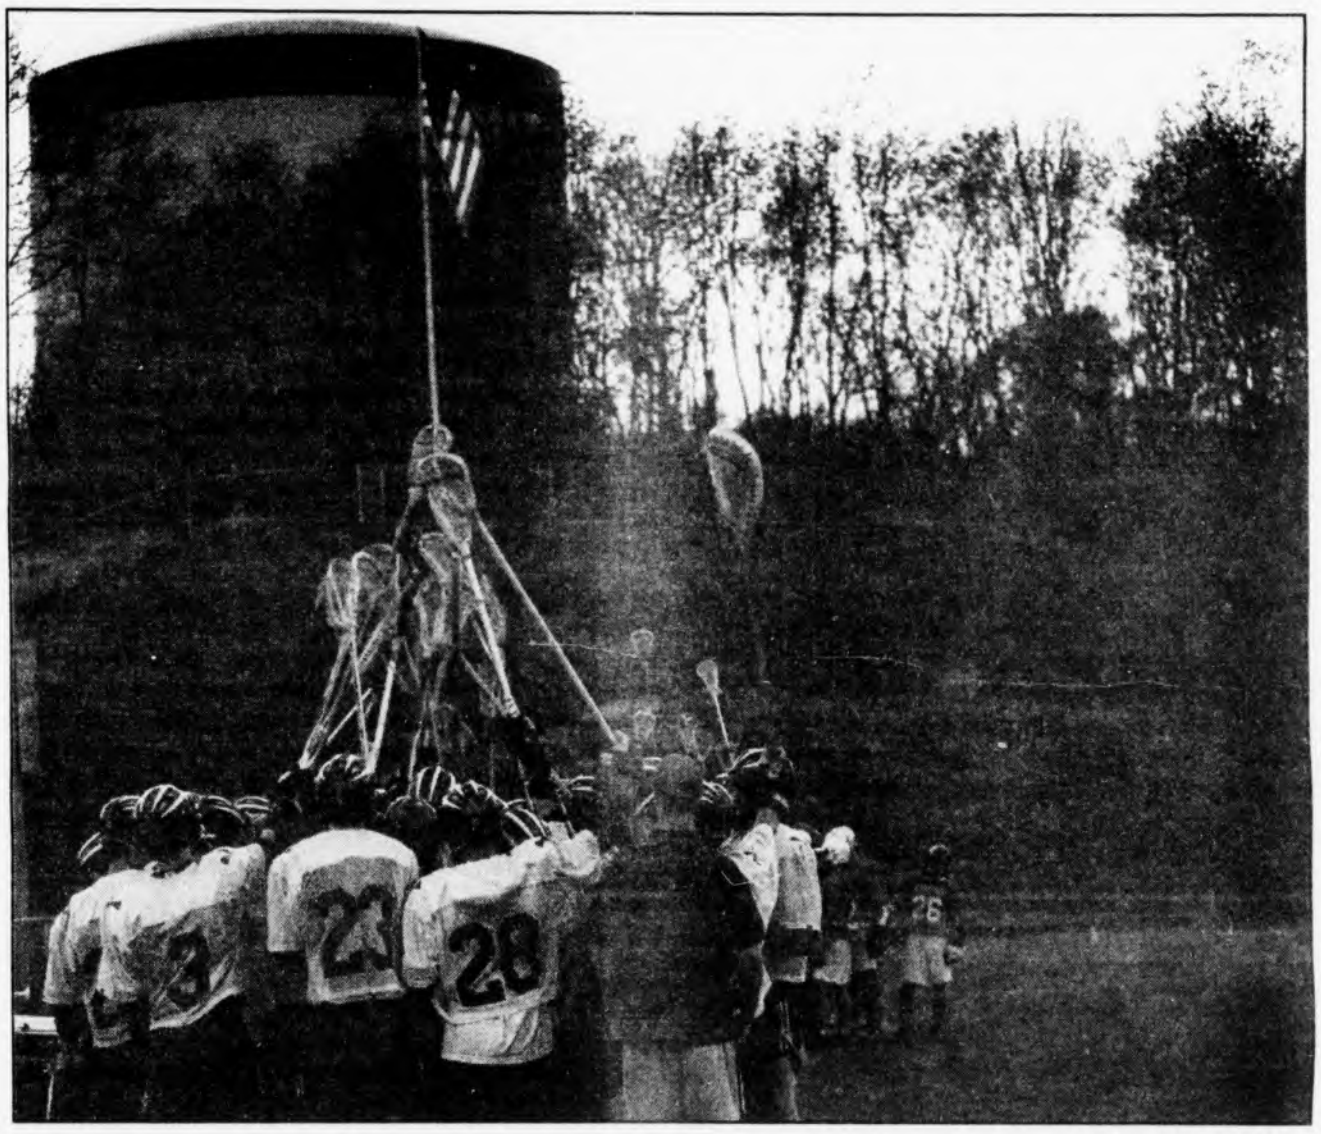
The Lacrosse Boosters refreshment stand, featuring hot pizza, cold drinks and snacks of all kinds had taken care of dinner. The endless rains of the previous week had taken care of the grass and the weather. And the Varsity Lacrosse Team was about to take care of their opponents.

But it wouldn't be easy.

It took 22 saves by standout goalie Sophomore Kevin Devito goals from five different Skippers, and a sudden death overtime for the win, but win they did.

At the end of the first period, Cohasset was down by a manageable 2-1. Three goals by Barnstable in the second period, with a response of just one from the Skippers, and the half time score was an ominous 5-2.

But things heated up in the third period, with Cohasset scoring three to the opponents two. With one minute to go in the fourth period, the score was 10-8, Barnstable.



Cohasset called a time out, and with 56 seconds left to play senior Eric Moore scored and scored. Recovering possession, Jamie Buick scored again to take the game into overtime.

With no one left sitting in the bleachers at the 1:40 mark in the sudden death overtime period, Jamie Buick scored again to end and win the game.

Ted Goff and Travis Moore had a goal apiece. Seniors Pat Leahy (2), Eric Moore (3) and Jamie Buick (4) made Cohasset's total. Assists from Buick (2), Eric Moore (2), Pat Leahy (2) and Travis Moore, contributed to the stellar win for Cohasset.

For this squad, Friday night's game is followed by Monday's against their rivals in Hingham, and Wednesday night's in Sandwich.

Cohasset Lacrosse is a winning thing, a legend in the making. On the junior level, the two youngest teams have played a total of 10 games and lost only one. They still have six games and a jamboree to look forward to this season. The 7-8 grade town team, coached by Terry Kahn is currently 5-1, with four games and a jamboree ahead of them. The Middle School team, coached by 1997 Pilgrim Conference Coach of the Year Ken Eckberg is 3-1, with four games to go.

STAFF PHOTO/DOUG MCFADD

The Skippers offer a salute after their exciting win over Barnstable.

It's a real family event. Brothers Ronan and Jamie Buick, Pat and Tom Leahy, Travis and Eric Moore, cousins Bill Good and Ted Goff help fill out the Men's Varsity roster.

It's a national thing, with former Cohasset players helping out in schools from Indiana to New Hampshire, from Ohio to Rhode Island. It's a growing thing, with clubs growing into school teams and youth leagues doubling in size and generous contributions to the Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters from friends, community businesses and corporations.

98 safety tips for the summer of '98

By Constance Pittman Lindner

A gentle breeze on the porch, ice cubes clinking in a frosty pitcher of lemonade, the sound of the surf, a picnic in the park, tall ice-cream cones, mosquitoes, sunburn, allergies — ahhh, summer. To make this a happy and memorable one for you and your loved ones, follow these 98 simple safety tips...

Prevent sunburn

1. If possible, avoid direct sun exposure during the hours of 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. when ultraviolet (UV) rays are at their strongest. Quick tip: The shorter your shadow, the stronger the UV rays are.

2. Use a sunscreen with a sun protection factor (SPF) of at least 15.

3. Wear light colored, loose-fitting, not loosely woven clothing.

4. Wear a wide-brimmed hat.

5. Wear sun glasses that bear an American National Standards Institute label specifying the amount of UV light they block — 95 for normal eyes, 99 percent for sensitive or recently operated on eyes is recommended.

6. Treat skin burns with ibuprofen, cool compresses and cornstarch, baking soda or Aveeno colloidal oatmeal baths.

7. If you've blistered, call your physician — you have second degree burns.

Lessen allergy symptoms

8. Avoid outdoor activities when pollen counts are high.

9. Use an air conditioner if possible, as it filters out pollen and dust mites.

10. Clean your air conditioner and the filter once a month — air conditioners are fertile ground for mold spores and filters will eventually blow out allergens when they've reached their filtering capacity.

11. Do not cut the grass yourself, and don't stroll about on freshly mowed lawn.

12. Keep window sills and curtains clean; dust and pollen clings to these surfaces.

13. Dust your house with a damp cloth or sponge so you don't toss dry dust about as you clean.

14. Use mold-combating cleaning agents for bathrooms and garbage pails, where mold thrives.

15. Check for dust on top of taller and hard-to-reach furniture items.

16. Vacuum dust mites from rugs, mattresses, furniture, curtains and carpets.

17. Toss your pillows in the washer and dryer to combat dust mites, and use pillows labeled "hypoallergenic."

18. Wash your furry pets and brush their fur outdoors to reduce the amount of allergy-producing animal dander in your home.

19. Speak to your physician about the new nasal sprays available which alleviate symptoms effectively.

Take out the sting

20. Use insect repellents containing DEET with 30 percent concentration for adults, less than 15 percent for children 10 and under, none at all for children under 2, and don't slather it on! DEET (diethyl toluamide) is a toxic chemical used in over 97 percent of all insecticides. DEET can cause skin irritations, seizures and even death, in some cases.

21. Use DEET products only when truly needed, such as dusk or dawn hours when mosquitoes are busiest, or when in an infested area.

22. Try insect repellent alternatives, such as Avon's Skin-So-Soft, which is said to keep mosquitoes away with its oil of citronella ingredient (like the citronella candles used in gardens to keep mosquitoes at bay).

23. Deter mosquitoes by wearing light colored clothing; mosquitoes are said to be drawn to dark colors.

24. Apply a baking soda paste to mosquito bites to relieve itchiness and draw out the irritant.

25. Abstain from wearing scented skin products which attract not only gnats, but bees, hornets and wasps.

26. Stick to hiking paths when walking — if you must walk in overgrown grass, tuck your pants into your socks to prevent ticks from getting to your legs.

27. Check for ticks when bathing. A poppy-seed sized tick could lead to flu-like or arthritic symptoms that aren't always coupled with the telltale bull's eye rash.

28. Remove a discovered tick gently but firmly, using tweezers to grasp its head (located closest to your skin). Clean the area with an antiseptic lotion.

29. Tape the removed tick to a piece of cardboard or enclose it in a jar and give it to your board of health for identification purposes.

30. Check your pets, especially your dogs, for ticks which can be removed in the same manner as just described for humans.

31. Contact your physician if you have a rash and/or flu-like symptoms after a suspected tick bite; antibiotic treatment may be in order.

32. Bring symptoms ranging from arthritis to changes in heart beat after a suspected tick bite to the attention of your physician.

33. Get immediate medical care for skin reactions in areas other than the site of a bee sting, difficulty in breathing, swelling of the tongue, dizziness and even cardiac arrest; these are just some of the symptoms of an allergic reaction to a bee sting. Get to a doctor for an injection of epinephrine.

34. Remove bee stings carefully with tweezers. Don't pinch or pull, as this only spreads the venom. As with all insect bites or stings, wash the wounded area.

35. Get away from a wasp that's already stung you — it can sting again.

36. Use one percent hydrocortisone cream and/or antihistamine tablets to lessen the painful itching and swelling of bee and wasp stings.

37. Watch out for all stinging insects in open soda cans or in the grass (wear shoes when walking in the grass!).

Weathering storms

38. Recognize the stillness before the storm as a call to action.

39. Find shelter when skies darken, light flashes and wind picks up.

40. Keep car windows closed and convertible roofs up at the first sign of a storm.

41. Get to land if in a boat or swimming; water conducts electricity.

42. Find the shortest tree in a wooded area and crouch under it with your head down to your knees; make yourself the smallest target possible.

43. Give first aid (CPR) and call 911 for a lightning victim. Check for burns where the electricity has entered and exited the body.

Practice safe sports

44. Take classes for swimming, boating, water skiing or whatever water sports you plan to engage in this summer.

45. Follow the rules — they exist to keep you and others safe!

46. Wear a U.S. Coast Guard-approved lifejacket when boating and always let someone know when you'll be back.

47. Do not engage in sports if you've taken in alcoholic beverages or drugs.

48. Do not swim while chewing gum.

49. Do not swim when tides are rough.

50. Do not swim in a lake or at the beach where a lifeguard is not present or enter the water without a swimming buddy — make sure someone on shore knows you've gone for a swim.

51. Pay attention to signs alerting visitors to undertow, jellyfish or strong tides at the beach.

52. Do not dive into water when you can't see the bottom; you could be injured by an unseen object.

53. Do not swim near piers or areas where you could get caught in plant life.

54. Do not swim if you're tired, cold, have had too much sun or are far from safety.

55. Wear a bicycle helmet when bicycling that meets the safety standards of the American National Standards Institute (ANSI), the Snell Memorial Foundation or the American Society for Testing and Materials (ASTM) — look for the labels stating that the helmet is up to these standards.

Prevent dehydration

56. Make sure to get at least 8 glasses of fluids per day.

57. The elderly should make doubly sure they get their 8 glasses; their thirst mechanism is not as acute as in their earlier years and can't cue them properly as to hydration needs.

58. Replenish sodium and other electrolyte balance with juice or even non-diet 7Up or ginger ale if you've been exercising for over 1 1/2 hours in the sun.

Beat the heat

59. Keep an air conditioner set between 75 and 80 degrees F.

60. Take a cool bath or shower or visit an air conditioned place if you don't have the luxury of owning one yourself.

61. Don't rev up your body's metabolism with heavy food — dine light!

62. Lower or cut out your caffeinated and alcoholic beverage intake to cut down on fluid loss.

63. Don't exert yourself at midday — get chores done in the early morning or late evening when temperatures are more forgiving.

Travel safely

64. Get your medications in order. Have written and signed prescriptions with you, including generic names, in case of confusion abroad.

65. Have your immunization record and medical history on hand, including the name and phone number of your personal physician in case of emergency.

66. Have a complete medical check-up before leaving for an extended vacation.

67. Keep your most recent electrocardiogram (ECG) if you have heart disease, in case you require treatment while away.

68. Make sure your immunizations are up-to-date.

69. Watch out for Montezuma's Revenge — don't ingest unbottled water — not even when brushing your teeth or showering, in undeveloped or developing regions. Don't eat raw vegetables and fruits that can't be peeled first, ice cubes, raw dairy products, food that isn't hot or well-done or street vendor food. You can have bottled water, soft drinks and alcoholic beverages served from the original bottle. Coffee and tea made with boiling water is usually safe.

70. Don't forget your health coverage information.

71. Bring essential first-aid items: antibacterial cream, antihistamines, bandages, antacids, aspirin, decongestants, moist towelettes, laxatives, a thermometer, and scissors.

72. Be careful with your medications and medical documents — carry them on board with you to prevent possible loss.

73. Wear comfortable layers to allow for temperature changes.

Plan a perfect picnic

74. Wash your hands after handling raw meat, fish and poultry before returning to prepare other food in order to prevent contamination.

75. Wash fruits and vegetables thoroughly to scrub off harmful dirt and bacteria.

76. Wrap foods separately in plastic so drippings from meat, fish and poultry can't get onto other foods.

77. Transfer foods directly from the freezer or refrigerator to the cooler. Keep most perishable items near the ice.

78. Keep the cooler in the car and not in the hot car trunk. At the picnic site, keep the cooler in the shade.

Garden safely

79. Choose tools with long handles to save your back from bending.

80. Use a wheelbarrow for heavier packages.

81. Wear closed shoes to prevent insect stings and mowing accidents.

82. Don't attempt to fiddle with the motor equipment unless the motor has been shut off.

83. Don't spray bug or weed killers in windy weather or without donning protective glasses, pants, long-sleeved pants and gloves to protect against irritating chemicals.

84. Follow the safety tips offered above for dealing with the dangers of sun, insects and heat.

View fireworks as spectator

85. Never allow children to set off fireworks.

86. Steer clear of others when tossing fireworks.

87. Don't re-light fireworks — pour water over "duds."

88. Keep a bucket of water on hand in case of fire.

89. Keep fireworks stored in a cool, dry place.

90. Set off fireworks away from dry, flammable objects, trees, and your home.

91. Don't set off fireworks in closed casings — the casing can become as dangerous as shrapnel on impact.

92. Wear safety goggles — spectators should protect their eyes, too, if possible.

93. Best bet — go to a public fireworks display and share in the fun with your community.

Fill your first-aid kit

94. Keep a first aid kit in an area you can get to quickly in case of emergency.

95. Make sure you keep the kit well-stocked with unexpired medications.

96. Keep your medicine box locked and away from young children's reach.

97. According to the National Pharmaceutical Association, your first aid box should contain: adhesive waterproof dressings; wound dressings—including non-stick types; sterilized cotton wool; safety pins and tweezers; triangular bandage; crepe bandage; hypoallergenic tapes and plasters; small scissors; Calamine lotion; insect repellent; sting relief cream or spray; Arnica cream; thermometer; eye lotion; adult analgesic; junior paracetaol tablets or syrup (children under the age of 12 years should not be given aspirin).

Pamper your pet

98. Take your pets to the veterinarian for summer check-ups — ask about heartworm pills, flea collars and the like so that you and your pets can have a healthy, pest-free summer and don't leave them in a hot car.

A good day for a big fish

THE FISH STORY

MARK TRASK

Goodbye to the monsoons of early May, hello sunshine!

The ocean rollers were still over the jetty at Lighthouse Point the other day when Jeff Peters scrambled over the wet boulders to safety on the inside jetty. There, casting a black Mambo Mino, Jeff connected with the first keeper of the young season! Back at the shop he purchased another. Had to stop fishing, he'd lost it.

Paul "Squirrel" Hansell has picked up the rod and reel for the new season and after one dry trip managed to find the stripers. The Glades gave up a couple as well as Bassings Beach. The northeast flow kept a thick blanket of weeds in the way inside Strawberry Point. Next trip was over to Little Harbor where he got a keeper and could see many more.

Fat sea worms floating on the current behind Hugo's/Charthouse/soon to be Roy's Atlantica brought Don Schneider smiling back to the shop for more. They are really thick in there on the dropping tide, and not just schoolies he reports. Cunningham was Don's next destination, where he caught bass both outside the mouth and up inside the bridge.

Legal-size cod (21 inches) can be found inside the B-Buoy if you can get your jig through the masses of mackerel schooling just offshore. Odds are good that Pemberton will be overrun by week's end. The North River bell has also been a decent destination for smaller boats. Many cod are gobbling clams and Solvroken jigs though the lengths are somewhat subpar vs. the B-Buoy.

Mackerel everywhere is the word from the boats that have been out. Pete Parker of Cohasset was putting his new machine through the paces Saturday and reports large schools of macks top and bottom near the 21 Buoy. The upper reaches of the South River, below the Veteran's Park in Marshfield, has schools of herring from bank to bank on the high tide.

The 1998 Norwell Fishing Derby is in the books. Entrants numbered 235 and 145 fish were brought in to be measured. The five Divisions were all won by pickerel. Prize winners (with their winning entries) were as follows: Grand Prize: Brett Blaisdll 20-7/8; Adult first: Charlie Dirk 20; second: Jay Holleran 19; High School first: Kevin Draheim 17; second: Kevin Campbell 16-3/4; Grades 5-8 first: Andrew Ormsby and James Ellis tied 17-7/8; second: John Wrick 17-1/4; Grades 1-4 first: Andrew Puricelli 17-1/2; second: Robert Ammon 17-1/4; K and Under first: Rebecca Ellis 17-3/4; second: Laura Kardok 16-1/2. Congratulations to all the anglers and the Norwell community for establishing such a fine event.

That desperate grown we all heard last week was Fisherman Jack, off the tote road at Brushy Hill Reservoir. A mammoth bass snacked on his 3-inch black back Rebel and headed for cover. Try as he might Jack couldn't turn the fish and it zoomed for cover in a thick bush. I sat down to wait him out said Jack but it wasn't to be. After I felt him moving again the line kept going and then snapped. All I saw was its mouth Jack recalled, holding his fingers and thumb in a circle, the mouth was like that.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

Maritime Museum to open

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum at Elm Street, Cohasset Center, will open for its summer season Tuesday, June 2. The museum will be open each afternoon from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., except Mondays, from then through September. Admission is free, and donations are accepted.

The Maritime Museum, itself once a ship chandlery for Samuel Bates' fishing fleet, houses an extensive group of collections devoted to Cohasset's own maritime history. The town's major industries for nearly two centuries, from about 1700 to the 1890s, were fishing and shipbuilding. Peak years for the mackerel fishery in Cohasset were reached by 1850, when more than 50 large family-owned two-masted schooners called this their home port. A number of those schooners were built in shipyards at "Ship Cove," today known as Cohasset Harbor. The Maritime Museum illustrates that era of sailing vessels with exhibits of ship models, 19th century fishing gear, navigational instruments, shipwrights' tools, charts and pictures. Additionally, the story of shipwrecks and lifesaving is shown, and the history of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse is illustrated.

The museum also contains, on its second floor, a group of collections of more general historical nature; from Native American stone tools to early school desks to cordwainer's equipment and housewright's tools, mostly from early Cohasset.

Be sure to plan a visit to the Maritime Museum this summer to see a unique view of this early New England coastal village. The Historical Society's telephone number is (781) 383-1434.

Police department made 16 arrests last month

April was a fairly busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were a total of 16 arrests. Seven were for outstanding warrants. Four were for Operating a Motor Vehicle while Under the Influence of Alcohol. Three were for Operating a Motor Vehicle After License Revocation and, finally, two were for being Minors Transporting Alcohol., Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

There were no Breaking and Enterings reported to the department during April.

During April, the police department received a total of 597 calls for service. Of those calls, 96 were emergency 9-1-1 calls.

"On April 8, Norfolk County District Attorney Jeffrey Locke and I spoke to the Drug and Alcohol Committee and a group of parents. The topics discussed were party host responsibility, prom night and procedures for first-time juvenile offenders," Noonan said.

The annual Rotary Road Race was held April 5 and went off without a hitch. Along with several detail officers normally assigned to the race, the police department assigned two bike patrols to the race funded by the Community Policing Grant.

"Finally, April 28, 29 and 30, I attended the 1998 Annual Police Chiefs Conference in Leominster. Some of the guest speakers were Secretary of Public Safety, Kathleen O'Toole, Robert Kaiser, who spoke of issues of Managing Employees and Jack Enter, speaking on Leadership Qualities," Noonan said.

More police at Nantasket Beach

House Chairman of Ways and Means Paul Haley has agreed to increase public safety at the Metropolitan District Commission Reservation at Nantasket Beach.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray said she is pleased with Chairman Haley's response to her request for more police coverage at Nantasket Beach.

"All of us who are in close proximity to the beach area, and the people of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, as well as other towns and cities, will feel safer with the additional State Police presence," she said. Murray said people walk the boardwalk at the beach daily and to have this extra coverage from June through September is greatly appreciated.

Will Corps derail Greenbush plans?

Agency calls MBTA analysis 'sketchy, flawed'

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Unless the MBTA can convince the Army Corps of Engineers otherwise, it's back to the drawing board for the transit authority's proposal to restore Greenbush rail service to the South Shore.

As the lead federal agency involved in reviewing the project, the Corps is taking a look at alternatives which could prove less environmentally damaging than the $285 million, 17-mile line.

Last week, the Army Corps released a study prepared by a consulting firm, which stated the MBTA's ridership and environmental impact projections and analysis of alternatives for Greenbush — which would run from Boston to Scituate — are sketchy and flawed.

"The MBTA's forecast methodology is insensitive to key travel decision variables such as: transit fare, travel cost, highway and transit system congestion, transit system accessibility, downtown Boston parking costs and other variables which are typically considered in a travel demand forecast," the report stated. "Since the alternatives analysis is also based on the Greenbush forecasting methodology, the accuracy of the alternatives analysis is highly questionable."

According to Joseph Pesaturo, spokesperson for the MBTA, the transit authority disagrees

Town's train report isn't pretty

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The coming Greenbush train will disrupt the quality of life in Cohasset far more than the MBTA has admitted up to now.

This is the interim conclusion of the committee formed to study the problems the train will bring to town. The Greenbush Mitigation Committee will be at the selectmen's meeting Monday June 1 to talk over the developing situation. Chairman Thomas Gruber said a joint meeting between his committee and the selectmen could be on tap for June 8 as well.

Greenbush is the missing link in the Old Colony train restoration. Two other commuter lines, Plymouth and Middleboro, started operating last fall and were up to full service the weekend of Dec. 1. But setbacks and delays have snarled up the schedule for Greenbush, the third prong of the restoration. Its planned construction along a 17.7 mile long right of way from Scituate to Boston winds through wetlands and historic districts. Building Greenbush has posed a challenge, as the T's environmental manager Andrew Brennan has previously acknowledged. Yet Brennan has stuck to a script that insists the train will have no impact of wetlands and flood control work in Cohasset. The T has also held the train will improve air quality. Their experts also said the roar of the engine and the rumble around the track will bother only a few people who live in about nine

State checks out oil tank salvaging site

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The state is investigating a house in Cohasset where oil tanks were being salvaged. The tanks reportedly contained waste oil and home heating oil. It is not yet known if there was any contamination.

The house, located at 30 Hammond Ave., lies in a residential neighborhood. Guy J. Scarpaci, the owner of Scarpaci Environmental Engineering, has reportedly been using the site to dismantle oil tanks, according to Joseph Ferson, the information officer at the state Department of Environmental Protection.

Scarpaci did not return calls before the Mariner went to press.

Ferson said records showed about 2,100

Veterans turn out to recall fallen comrades

Although many are well into their 70s – local veterans still have a lot of fight left in them.

They not only fought for freedom but continue to fight to ensure enduring respect for their fallen comrades.

World War II veteran Ralph Perroncello,74, commander of the VFW Post, leads the annual parade along with Steve Wigmore , 63, commander of the American Legion.

When a group of cyclists tried to ride through the ceremony at POW Square at the corner of Depot Court and N. Main Street Monday – Perroncello took matters into his own hands grabbing the handlebars of the lead rider's bicycle and insisting they stop.

It was a minor altercation in an otherwise perfect day, that glistened with sunshine and attracted hundreds of Cohasset citizens to the Town Common, Veterans Memorial Park and along the parade route.

But the incident helped crystallized what veterans' groups are worried about as Memorial Days around the country become more focused on outdoor barbecues and hot dogs and less on remem-

Objections to block scheduling

Gary Vanderweil, 500 Jerusalem Road, took his parent's campaign to improve block scheduling before the school board in person Thursday. He met some opposition which also had a chance to sound off because the school committee put the issue on the agenda. Several teachers said they thought the debate was "premature" and maintained block schedules did improve grades.

Vanderweil asked the board to "look at the options" and see the current block scheduling as one of four viable ways to deal with the mandates of Education Reform. The reform act calls for more time in the classroom. In a school year students must spend 990 hours in class. But Vanderweil said 50-minute classes or hour long classes could also satisfy the requirement. He objected to the 90-minute sessions because they meant students took fewer subjects in a semester. His son, for instance, did not have a math or science class for a seven or eight month stretch. When the core subject classes finally got underway, they came in a semester made shorter because of the new state test.

"It took two weeks out of math and science," he said. "It's not fair to carve two weeks off with the damn test." He asked for a study before the school board decides to back the block program.

The school committee will wait for a "full report" from the school council before taking a position about the block schedules, Chairman Rick Shea said. The report is due in June.

Correction

On May 14, 1998, in an article on page 5 titled "Water Contracts to be Awarded," the Mariner reported that "American Anglian Water Company is a Dedham/Westwood Company half owned by Mass-American Water Company." This is inaccurate: Mass-American has no ownership interest in American Anglian Company or vice versa. Rather, Mass-American Water Company is a wholly owned subsidiary of American Water Works Company and American Anglian Company is a joint venture of American Water Works Company and Anglian Water Company.

As good as it gets

Loring Hall fills a niche in the theater business

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

"As Good As It Gets," the title of the film that recently had a two-week run at the Loring Hall Cinema on lower Main Street in Hingham, could also serve double duty to describe how people feel about attending movies at the 146-year-old theater.

"Often, it shows movies that the big theaters play only a short time or miss altogether. Even better, it's reasonably priced, and the theater itself throws you back to another time," said Lee Seibert of Pembroke. "My husband and I like to sit in the balcony. It has the old charm that the megaplexes just seem to miss."

The 325-seat theater, with its large screen, balcony, avante garde films and history-rich setting, is worth the journey not only for folks from towns like Cohasset and Scituate. It also attracts attendees who've traveled from as far as Dedham, Medford and the Cape.

Edie Scott, co-owner of Loring Hall with husband Phillip Scott, chalks it up to "attracting a totally different audience who trusts our judgments in films" so much so that some loyal theatergoers attempted to purchase tickets for the post-wedding celebration of the Scotts' son and his bride a few years ago. Apparently, when theater manager Jim Ebersole put up a sign saying, "The Celebration Continues with David & Marybeth,' people thought it was an artsy film of some kind and wanted to get in," laughed Scott.

The once-yellow building was recently scraped and primed in preparation for getting some fresh white coats of paint, which is why it has looked a little worn of late. "It's been white for years," explained Scott, "and so we're going to stay with that."

Despite a color change and a few renovations over the century and a half of its existence, the theater has kept much of its essence. Evidence of the theater's rich history is found today in the weights (not visible) that still hang from the stage rafters, which used to move stage scenery for live shows performed there so long ago. The piano that animated silent films earlier in the century also remains, although it is now out of tune. And the kitchen, where local women prepared tea and cakes for Civil War soldiers, is currently a storage room.

The piano that animated silent films earlier in the century also remains, although it is now out of tune. And the kitchen, where local women prepared tea and cakes for Civil War soldiers, is currently a storage room.

Built in 1852 for the "meetings and lawful amusements" of Hingham's townspeople, Loring Hall also possessed dressing rooms on a lower floor as well as a seating for 400 to 500 people. The "ladies of Hingham" had organized a fair, concert, social party and other events to pull together the nearly $700 that essentially paid for the building site and the foundation. The building itself cost about $4,000, which was donated by Colonel Benjamin Loring, a Hingham native born before the start of the Revolutionary War.

The Scotts bought the building in 1964.

"Before we were married," said Edie Scott, "we had a theater in Wollaston. Our projectionist there heard from the Loring's projectionist that the building was going up for sale. We were going to marry in May and had just bought a house in South Hingham to live in, so we decided to buy Loring Hall. It's been very good to us, and we'll always keep it in the family."

The Scott's son, Dave, has been choosing the films shown at Loring Hall for the last 10 years. He tries to find "films with heart" and bases his picks on what's doing well in the Kendall Square, Harvard Square and West Newton theaters, as those are the ones he feels would appeal most to the audience his mother describes as "sophisticated and well-educated."

"The English Patient' went on forever, and 'The full Monty' did so much business for so many weeks that we finally had to bring something new in," Dave Scott recalled. "We felt we should go onto something else. It's hard to guarantee what will work, though. We once had a critically acclaimed Russian film that lasted only one week. If the audience doesn't want to see it, they won't."

Earliest Patrons

Today's films are a far cry from original Loring Hall attractions. Some of the earliest patrons of the hall enjoyed lectures by such notables as Oliver Wendell Holmes and Ralph Waldo Emerson. Hinghamites paid 12 1/2 cents each in March of 1853 to hear Emerson talk to his audience "in a quiet and unostentatious way," according to the Hingham Journal's report the following week.

The Loring Hall, built in 1852, was once home to all sorts of community activities including dances, drama presentations, dinners and minstrel shows.

Dance classes, such as one mentioned in George Lincoln's diary entry of Jan. 15, 1872, also took place in Loring Hall and could be enjoyed from outside as well as in. Wrote Lincoln, "When I passed...I listened to the music for a few minutes. The scene was one of youthful vigor, grace, and beauty."

Lincoln's son, George M. Lincoln, was a professional violinist whose concerts at the hall drew a full house, even when he was still a boy. A playbill for one of George Jr.'s concerts, given Thanksgiving of 1854, is framed and posted at the foot of one of the hall's two staircases leading to the balcony. Amateur theatricals, comedies and the like were also performed at the Loring.

Political causes were championed in the Loring, too. During the late 1800s, when advocates of temperance began to come forward, a "law and order meeting" was held at the hall, urging that the town's selectmen move against the illegal sale of "intoxicating liquors." And the suffrage movement was argued for when Reverend Anna Howard Shaw spoke for women's right to vote there. In 1884, Shaw's appearance with John D. Long on behalf of the Massachusetts Women's Suffrage Association drew 200 people.

In 1887, when black Civil War veterans of the 54th and 55th Regiments came with their families by steamboat to adorn the Hingham Cemetery grave of John Andrew, who served as an anti-slavery Massachusetts governor during the Civil War, they were entertained at Loring Hall with humorous reminiscences by postmaster Peter Sprague, himself a former officer in the 55th.

Electricity came to Hingham in the late 1800s, and by 1912, the hall began showing silent films, with Howie Horton accompanying them on the piano. By the 1920s, 50 cents could buy an evening of movies and vaudeville. The early 1920s also saw a Loring Hall meeting entitled, "The Poetic Beauty of the Irish Soul," in which the growing Irish population in Hingham was celebrated in song, dance, and story.

During the 1930s, then-manager Dan Murphy oversaw the renovation of the building for $15,000, which led to the creation of an "up-to-date" projection room, two bathrooms and a front area where the ticket booth, concession counter, and staircases now stand. "They sort of moved the original front facade to the front of the new part of the building," explained current manager Ebersole.

In less happy times, such as during World War II, Loring Hall was flanked by "cages," as they were called, for collecting pots and pans to be melted down and used for weapons in the war effort. And during the post-war Red Scare, a depiction of "Invasion U.S.A." attempted to prepare theater goers for what their world would be like should the Atom bomb drop.

Today, there are sentimental memories people have of the place, that they share, on occasion, with Ebersole or his two co-managers, Jimmy Maher and Steve Abouzeid.

"One guy came in a while back, about age 60," said Ebersole, "and told me he could remember his father playing piano for the silents. Other people come in and tell me they have old playbills. I tell them, 'Bring them in!', but they don't because of their sentimental value."

"I've always liked this theater," continued Ebersole, "and it draws a nice crowd."

Joseph Osgood,at age 33, in 1848.

The new elementary school will be named after Joseph Osgood. The school board voted unanimously Thursday to keep the school name the same in honor of the Unitarian pastor who is known as "the father of the Cohasset school system."

This will be the third school building in Cohasset to be called Osgood. The first one was named after him in 1890. That building was located near the present police and fire station on Elm Street. The second one, the Osgood School on Ripley Road, is being sold after the children move into the third Osgood School. It is still under construction but is expected to open in time for the first day of school in September.

School board member Mark DeGiacomo said he wanted to keep the Osgood name after he found out "what he meant to this town." Osgood was a former school board member, but his work on the school committee was a small part of his 50 years of service to the schools. He was a teacher and minister who was driven to reform education. As the superintendent, he replaced the one room schoolhouses with modern schools separated by grades. He also started a "full-term" high school for boys and girls.

The school council supplied DeGiacomo and the rest of the board with a capsule summary of his accomplishments. They also urged the board to keep the Osgood name for the new school.

Osgood's great-granddaughter, Frances Maroni of Falls Church, Va., said she was thrilled about the news.

Want a Cohasset boat mooring? Get in line

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Getting a boat mooring in Cohasset is easy. All you have to do is get your name on the waiting list, say a daily prayer, and hope you don't die before they draw your name. That may be an exaggeration, but not by much. It's not unusual for people to wait more than 15 years for a mooring in Cohasset Harbor.

So what's the deal here? Why are moorings so popular, yet so hard to obtain? Who decides who gets one and who doesn't? And is the process fair? Harbormaster John H. Winters has the answers to those questions and more.

Winters said that the amount of time someone has to wait for a mooring varies, but the average wait is around 12 to 15 years. But that wait has not deterred people from signing up, as the list of people waiting now exceeds the number of available moorings. More than 300 people are on a waiting list for one of the 280 moorings in the harbor. Moorings open up only when someone gives up their spot voluntarily or dies. Winters said Cohasset's harbor is very small, which restricts the number of moorings that can be laid in the water.

Moorings are generally placed in somewhat deep waters to accommodate larger vessels, Winters said. In Cohasset, the only moorings available are publicly owned because they rest in federal waters. The federal government pays for harbor dredging, but that money comes with a price. Federal regulators require towns to allow anyone to apply for a mooring.

Anyone can get on the list, which has a diverse mix of people waiting, ranging from infants placed on the list by their parents to residents of Florida hoping for a spot. Moorings may be passed between husband and wife, but may not be transferred to children, parents, other relatives, friends, or anyone else. Once a person gets a mooring, it's theirs for the rest of their lives as long as they want it.

"As far as we're concerned, the process for distributing moorings has been refined by the Harbor Committee to the point where it is fairest to everyone," Winters said.

It is illegal to sell or rent moorings, or to try to register one to a corporation or trust. But the laws don't stop people from trying to get around the rules. Winters has seen every trick in the book and knows what to watch out for.

"Let's say you own a mooring and move to Florida," Winters said. "Someone buys half the boat, but the mooring stays in the original owners name. Then the following year the original owner sells the rest of the boat to the new owner who thinks he gets the mooring. But the mooring is registered to the original owner, not the new one. There are no partnerships allowed."

It costs $10 to get on the list, and applicants must reaffirm their name each year between Jan. 1 and April 1 or they get bumped to the bottom of the list. Harbor officials are not without mercy, and if someone forgets to reaffirm their name they will get a certified letter after April 1 giving them 15 days to sign up again.

People lucky enough to get a mooring must pay $10 per foot of vessel length per year for the privilege of tethering their boat in the water.

People with smaller boats are fortunate because there are many private clubs in town that offer slips at a dock. Most of the yacht clubs in town offer private slips. But slips usually cannot accommodate boats larger than 20 feet. People who want to tether their large boats in Cohasset need a mooring, hence the high demand for the limited spots.

Woody Chittick is the Commodore at the Cohasset Yacht Club (CYC). Chittick said that the yacht club offers about 120 slips, but none capable of accommodating a vessel longer than 20 feet. He pointed out that boats that need moorings are much larger than the boats that can fit into slips. Chittick said it is also difficult to guide a sailboat into a slip, although not entirely impossible. Another factor behind the demand for moorings are the number of people who own more than one boat. Chittick estimated that as many as two-thirds of the yacht club members have both slips and moorings.

So how do people feel about the long wait? Most just accept the fact that there's no way around the long wait. Selectmen Nan Roth is no exception. There is no executive privilege for town officials, fisherman, wealthy individuals or anyone else. Roth and her family have been waiting for a mooring since 1985. Last year, she moved up the list to number 33. That's pretty high up on the list but still a long way from the top.

Harbormaster John Winters said that the amount of time someone has to wait for a mooring varies, but the average wait is around 12 to 15 years. But that wait has not deterred people from signing up, as the list of people waiting now exceeds the number of available moorings.

"You have no choice but to wait if you want a mooring," Roth said. "I think it's a fair process, although it's a pain in the neck to have to re-sign up every year. At least they let you reaffirm your spot on the list by mail."

Roth is also not taking any chances that her children will not get their chance at a mooring. Like many other people, she has put her children on the list as well.

Roth is also hopeful that the Army Corps of Engineers will create more moorings after it is done dredging the harbor. She said the Army Corps is unpredictable, but has at least stated the possibility of additional moorings after the dredging project is finished. The Army Corps plans to place the moorings back in their original spots, then see if the dredging will allow for additional spots.

It wasn't always so hard to get a mooring. Former selectman Jane Goerdeke got one for a speed boat many years ago after a long wait. Goerdeke said the federal government used to allow special moorings for smaller boats, but discontinued that practice to open up the process to everyone.

"It makes it very difficult for the race fleet to continue," she said.

Sometimes people get a mooring approved at a time when they can't really use it. That was the case for former selectmen Martha Gjesteby. She wanted a 30-foot boat but had to wait for a mooring that could accommodate a boat that large. Then last year, her name went to the top of the list and she received a mooring. But there was a problem. She didn't have a boat anymore. Gjesteby had a 27-foot-boat, which she finally sold a few years ago. Fortunately, she can stay near the top of the list as long as she re-affirms her name every year. She has yet to get a new boat.

"My kids keep encouraging me to get a boat," Gjesteby said.

So if you think you might ever get a large boat, now is the time to get on the list. Say your prayers, don't hold your breath and maybe, just maybe, one day you'll be awarded with a mooring.

Street cut bill in the works

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Town Manager Mark Haddad is frowning on a move to reopen the street cut issue. Two Beacon Hill power brokers have sided with the cities and towns in their street battle with power companies. Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, and Rep. Daniel Bosley, D-North Adams, announced May 22 they will co-sponsor new legislation to give local governments more say about the way the companies dig up their streets. Potentially, the bill could re-instate the fees cities and towns used to charge the utility companies for digging up the roads to get at power lines.

That means Cohasset might ease out of the settlement Haddad struck last fall under pressure from Boston Gas. But in a telephone interview Tuesday, he made it clear he was satisfied about the Boston Gas deal and was not looking for an exit. He dismissed the new legislation and said it was unnecessary.

Boston Gas used to pay Cohasset $50 in the summer and $100 in the winter every time the company put a hole in the street. That system ended last November after the town agreed to give out free street permits for four years if the company agreed not to sue to recover $12,000 in fees Cohasset already charged.

Boston Gas went after settlements from a number of communities after it beat the city of Newton Aug. 14 out of $274,000 in street inspection fees. Haddad said then a settlement was "prudent" because the town would lose a court battle. He also said the company still has to post a bond to pay for the cost of street damage. The town would still be protected if Boston Gas crews left the road in bad shape.

James J. Tobin, a lawyer for the company, said last November the fees were becoming an uncontrollable cost. The company acted to put a stop to the "acceleration of costs" connected to street cuts. Ultimately, the state Supreme Judicial Court deemed the fees "illegal," making all the cities and towns became unofficial losers along with Newton.

But many communities were dissatisfied with the court's decision and doubted the bond was enough protection. Newton, for instance, is welcoming the new bill which was spearheaded by the Massachusetts Municipal Association, a lobbyist for the cities and towns. New legislation is the only way the local governments could win back the right to charge fees for inspectors because the decisions of the Supreme Judicial Court are final and cannot be appealed, according to Gayle Smalley, an attorney for Newton.

If passed, the new bill would enable local governments to make the companies pay when their repair work is sloppy. It could also empower communities already locked into settlements, she said.

"It could allow the cities and towns to charge different fees," she said over and above the settlement agreement. Because Bosley heads the committee over the Department of Telecommunications and Energy, she is hopeful the new bill stands a good chance of passage. Sullivan also holds a key position. He is transportation committee chairman.

Judge to decide fate of James Lane

Controversial 'access' stirs emotions on Pleasant St.

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

James Lane hardly seems like the type of street that would end up as the focus of a heated court battle. It's a small 100-yard-long street that is home to a small number of families.

But residents are angry that Edward Fitzpatrick of 68 Pleasant St. and his family are using a small strip of land at the end of the street to pass from their property to James Lane. James Lane residents say the traffic from Pleasant Street is dangerous for children in the neighborhood. Fitzpatrick said he has historic rights dating back 100 years to use the piece of land in question to access James Lane. However, Fitzpatrick does not own the land in question. Town meeting voters sided with the residents of James Lane last month and took the piece of land by eminent domain to block off the street and make it a dead-end.

Fitzpatrick did not like the town meeting decision and hired attorney Charles Humphreys to try and overturn the decision in Norfolk Superior Court. The matter was heard in court yesterday by a Norfolk Superior Court Judge who will review the facts and render a decision.

Humphreys said the town is unfairly trying to subvert the legal process by seizing the land. He said town officials blocked off the land in 1995 with rocks to restrict the Fitzpatrick's access. Fitzpatrick took the town to court and was able to force town officials to remove the rocks.

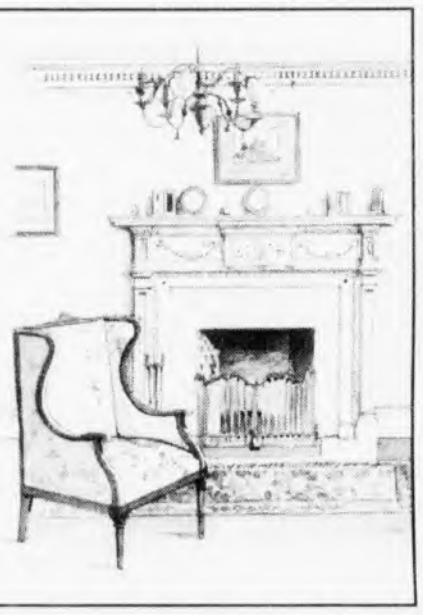
"The town blocked the road, blocking the Fitzpatricks access to James Lane, and I brought action in Norfolk Superior Court to set aside that action and get a preliminary injunction ordering the removal of the rocks," Humphreys said. "The judge approved the removal of the rocks. Now, the town decided to ignore the court and do an eminent domain taking."

At town meeting, Fitzpatrick said he and his family were the victims of a neighborhood vendetta trying to deny them legal access to James Lane.

But James Lane residents paint a different picture of events. Scott Smith of 49 James Lane has led a neighborhood drive to make James Lane a dead-end. Smith said safety is the real issue. He said there are too many vehicles speeding along the small road to access Pleasant Street. At town meeting, Smith said there have been as many as 10 or 12 cars at the Fitzpatricks — cars that race up James Lane and practically skid into the house.

Also speaking at town meeting, selectman Ronnie McMorris said James Lane had always been a dead-end historically, and a safe place where children could walk and play until the last six-to-eight years. She added that it was not necessary for the Fitzpatricks to use James Lane because they have two driveways on Pleasant Street.

"Yes, it's convenient— a minute or two less to go over to Pond Street— but we feel the convenience is overridden by public safety issues since the brush was cleared and James Lane is no longer a quiet, dead-end street," McMorris said.



Smith said the residents of James Lane are concerned only for the safety of their families. He said no one wishes to deny anyone their rights, and points out that the Fitzpatricks do not even own the land in question.

"The lives of everyone up and down this lane have been endangered by these fast-moving vehicles," Smith said. "Everyone in town is for it [closing the lane] and it makes sense. It's ludicrous to have a throughway from James Lane to Pleasant Street."

Smith added that he was encouraged by yesterday's events in court and is hopeful tha the judge will uphold the eminent domain taking.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said as far as the town is concerned, the land is owned by all of the residents along James Lane and has no real value. The town is taking the 120-square-foot patch of land for $1.

School superintendent search narrowed to four finalists

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Two superintendents from neighboring communities survived the winnowing of candidates for the Cohasset superintendent's job. Irene Sherry Kaplan, the present Whitman-Hanson Regional district school chief, and John D. MacLean, Jr, the Hull superintendent, are among the final four candidates. In all, one woman and three men were named finalists Thursday for the school superintendent's position. Supt. Stephen Hart is retiring in June.

The other two, also superintendents presently, also have ties to Massachusetts. They are Richard M. Carlson, the Lunenburg superintendent and Edward M. Malvey, the Griswold, Conn. School chief. Malvey was the assistant superintendent in Mansfield until 1992.

A fifth finalist, not named, has taken a post with another school district. There was no opportunity to name another candidate since decision letters had already been sent to the other semi-finalists.

Wednesday, Chairman Rick Shea and school board member Mark DeGiacomo were in Whitman to visit Kaplan. In a telephone interview she said they arrived at 8:30 a.m. and faced a full day of meetings and events. She sounded enthusiastic about introducing them to the Whitman and Hanson community and said she was "excited" to be a finalist. In her view, the challenge facing the new Cohasset superintendent has some similarities to her work as head of the Whitman-Hanson Regional district even though the state funding policy for regional schools is different. Kaplan said Whitman and Hanson were both "hard hit" by Proposition 2 1/2 and teamed up to provide quality education for their children. Both communities have recently build new schools and adopted technology programs.

Kaplan holds a doctorate from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. She also has a master's degree from Boston University and went to Queens College in New York.

Richard Carlson also said he was excited to be a finalist. He began his teaching career in special education and has developed methods to keep youngsters in school inside the district even though they may not be able to be in regular classrooms.

"Inclusion is not for everybody," said Carlson. He has turned away from the division between regular and special education. The director of instruction in Lunenburg is responsible for all the students. There is no special education or regular education in the district anymore.

Carlson has a doctorate in education from Nova Southeastern University in Florida. He went to Boston College and earned a master's degree in education from the University of Massachusetts.

Edward Malvey is also delighted to be a finalist. Malvey went to head the Griswold, Conn. School district in 1992. The community had just built new schools, and he saw the opportunity for ushering in a host of other changes. Malvey is proud of the national reputation enjoyed by Connecticut public schools. However, his "long-term career plan" was always to return to Massachusetts, he said. He was previously the assistant superintendent in Mansfield.

Malvey holds a doctorate in education from George Washington University. He went to Boston State College and earned a master's degree in education from Northeastern.

John MacLean also is excited to be named a finalist because opportunities like Cohasset seldom come along. He has reorganized the middle school in Hull to include the fifth- through eighth-grades. That is the grouping of grade levels called for under Education Reform. He also spent two years in planning the new curriculum.

MacLean earned a doctorate in education from Boston University. He also studied at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

The final four were chosen from a pool of 11 semi-finalists. Their names were never publicly announced. James Hardy, a search consultant from the state association of school committees, said the search committee had the right to keep the names and interviews secret. That is because several candidates requested confidentiality and said they would drop out if their names were aired.

Earlier Hardy said only one candidate would definitely withdraw if the search committee went public with a list of candidates. Two others delayed making a final decision before the search committee opted to handle the interviews behind closed doors.

Dates, times of finalists' interviews

The four finalists meet the school board starting June 8 at Cohasset High. All the interviews start at 7 p.m. The school board convenes a half an hour before. The sessions are open to the public.

Here are the dates of the interviews.

Monday June 8: Irene Sherry Kaplan

Tuesday June 9: Edward Malvey

Wednesday June 10: John Maclean

Monday June 15: Richard Carlson

OPINION

Letters' policy

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, the First Amendment is close to our hearts. So we encourage letters to the editor which we feel give our readers the opportunity to exercise their Freedom of Speech whether to speak out on an issue or to just say thank you to a deserving citizen or organization.

Since there are a lot of controversial topics in town to talk about — this is a good time for us to clarify our letters' policy.

A recurring question from readers is do we publish all the letters we receive.

The answer is yes with a few exceptions.

We do not publish letters on issues from students under 18 without a parent's permission.

We welcome letters from readers who disagree with our viewpoint.

All letters must be signed with the name and address of the author and include a telephone number for verification purposes only. It pains us when we receive a well-thought out letter from someone who for whatever reason prefers to remain anonymous and signs "concerned citizen" or "irate taxpayer" in lieu of their name. A recent letter was sent to us with a copy to selectmen and was signed "municipal worker."

We want to assure you, we do look into all tips including those we receive in unsigned letters to see if there is a news story there.

Unlike some newspapers, we do not impose a word limit on letters received here at the Cohasset Mariner. However, we encourage our letter writers to be as concise as possible. We reserve the right to edit letters for clarity and grammar.

While some may find our letters too verbose, during a recent Mariner survey - respondents were unanimous that one of their favorite parts of the paper is the letters' section.

We know it takes our readers a while to get their thoughts together and to put pen to paper about an issue they've just found out about. So while our deadline for community copy is 8 a.m. Friday for the following week's issue, we accept letters until noon on the Tuesday before publication.

Letters may be sent by fax to 741-2931 or by email to mary.ford@cnc.com. If you prefer mail the old-fashioned way our address is 73 South St., Hingham 02043. We always enjoy meeting our letter writers in person, so don't hesitate to drop your letter off at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building in Hingham Square. If we are on assignment, you can slip it under the door or through the mail slot in the door downstairs.

There's no doubt that putting pen to paper to share their views with fellow citizens is a popular activity among our readers.

Last year we received 136 letters from 99 different people. With an average of three to four letters a week since January, we're already ahead of last year's pace.

We feel strongly that letters provide our readers with a voice in their community newspaper.

So to those who haven't written, let us hear from you. And to those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing.

Let us know what you think in 1998.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Sewer follies' invitation declined

TO THE EDITOR:

The Sewer Commissioners have received a last minute invitation to participate in the so-called "Sewer Follies Symposium" on May 27. We have decided to decline this invitation for the following reasons.

The Sewer Commission is sponsoring a Public Meeting on Thursday, June 4 in the Town Hall auditorium to discuss options on the North Cohasset Sewer Project and to report on the Central Cohasset Sewer Project and long-range planning.

The Sewer Commission has held a series of public meetings and board meetings attended by members of the "Sewer Follies" group. We are well aware of the group's position.

We believe that the "Sewers Follies Symposium" signs erected by this group are symptomatic of a derogatory and confrontational attitude of people who do not appreciate, let alone recognize, the two decades of discussion, debate, and steady progress achieved by the Town and the Sewer Commission on this issue.

Finally, we expect that the "Sewer Follies" meeting will be counter-productive by generating misstatements of fact and encouraging confusion. We feel it is in the best interest of the town that the Sewer Commission not be in attendance and we encourage everyone to attend our meeting on Thursday, June 4.

Edward M. Guild, Chairman
Cohasset Sewer Commission

Learning support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The second graders at the Joseph Osgood School have been studying the Cohasset Community over the past month. One of the most important parts of this study are the walking field trips that the students take to learn about the interesting places in the community. When they return from these trips, each class creates a book which tells of the knowledge they have acquired.

The students and teachers would like to thank the Cohasset Town Hall, Cohasset Post Office, Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, Deer Hill School, Cohasset Police & Fire Station, Red Lion Inn, Unitarian Church, South Shore Art Center, Community Center and the Teen Center for their willingness to support the learning of the students.

Julie Guild to be honored

South Shore Republicans of Plymouth Norfolk Senatorial District will honor Julie Guild for GOP Service Flag Day, at an 11 a.m.-1 p.m. brunch, June 14, at Hingham's Tosca, 14 North Street.

"For over three decades, Julie Guild of Cohasset (formerly of Hingham), has been making politics fun," said GOP vice chairman Polly Logan, adding, "Guild has recruited winners, enlisted newcomers, opened her heart, her seaside home and pocketbook in order that the GOP would win. Guild was the first woman appointed to the Hingham Advisory Board and the first woman on the Derby Academy Board of Trustees. She helps the scholarship program for New England Farm and Garden and is on the board of Colonial Dames that maintains their Quincy Homestead. She also devotes myriad of hours to the South Shore Art Center and works for estate tax and tax fairness committees."

John Flanagan, who succeeds Guild as Cohasset town chairman said, "Donations will go to GOP candidates," and also noted that the date had been changed from May 31 to Flag Day, June 14.

Reservations are required and may be made with Carl Harris of Hingham, Joe Liberty of Scituate, Dana Toland of Weymouth, Rita Strong of Duxbury, Otis Carney of Marshfield and Janet Fogarty of Cohasset.

A frustrating evening for all

Wednesday, May 6, I attended a Public Hearing before Cohasset's Planning Board. I was there as a consultant to the applicant, who was seeking approval of a Subdivision Plan. (I am however, writing this piece as a concerned private citizen, not on behalf of the developer.) The proposed Subdivision would be a 26-lot residential development named Jerusalem Road Estates, located between Windy Hill Road and Black Rock Road, with the main entry from Jerusalem Road.

MY VIEW

JAMES SHIPSKY, ARCHITECT

This hearing was, in my opinion, a frustrating evening for everyone. First, it seemed to me no one felt free to simply state his/her basic position regarding the proposed project. Instead, basic positions were communicated via innuendo and implied assumptions. Second, I sensed a foregone conclusion that ultimately the developers would gain approval for their project, making the hearing a mere formality. Finally, there appeared to be only two possible outcomes available in the hearing process, with no hope of alternatives. I think the positions were:

Abutters and Other Concerned Residents:

They simply don't want the development. They'd prefer the land to remain as it is now, a "natural" wooded area. Part of what makes Cohasset such a beautiful place is the contrast between built-up areas and natural areas, whether it be the ocean, old farm land, or wooded areas. Clearly it is a good thing to not develop every square inch of Cohasset.

Unfortunately, 100% of the land in Cohasset has been zoned, and roughly 95% of it is zoned Residential. The Zoning Bylaws include in their purpose "preventing the overcrowding of land," and "avoiding undue congestion of population." But, since no land has been zoned as Open Space or Protected Natural Areas, the astonishing implied goal of the Zoning Bylaws is to develop this 95% of Cohasset, to the density allowed by the bylaws.

Several other mechanism function to limit development. Land unsuitable for a septic system, wetlands, flood plains, private funding of nature preserves. But the sewering of Cohasset will remove the first mechanism. The remaining three are not adequate for determining the future development in Cohasset.

But the residents can't simply say they don't want the development. For one thing, most of us live in homes built by developers, in earlier subdivisions. We know the applicant has the legal right to develop the land. And a beautiful single-family home in the suburbs is the bedrock of the American Dream. How do I deny it to others?

Unable to simply say, "NO MORE DEVELOPMENT", residents can only criticize minor points; "Will cars start using the emergency access road? Will cars slide onto Jerusalem Road when there's black ice? Doesn't Rattlesnake Run fall under the Rivers Protection Act? They promised a buffer zone to block our view of the development but didn't deliver it." And so on. There didn't seem to be a forum to discuss and understand what really bothered the Residents about the proposed development.

The residents know a lot about what the development will look like. The esthetic character will be determined by the cul-de-sac street, the lots, and the houses.

The streets will look like little state highways, because the Cohasset Subdivision Rules and Regulations require new subdivision streets to meet specifications remarkably similar to those for a state highway. The intention of the regulation was to prevent shabby road construction, but the outcome is streets like little state highways.

The distribution of houses will look like a tract subdivision, because the Cohasset Zoning Bylaws requires lot layouts based on the tract development model. Again, the intent was not to promote tract hosing, but again it is the outcome.

The houses will in all likelihood be pretentious trophy mini-mansions, because the developer will have spent so much money getting approvals, building a little state highway, sidewalks, drainage facilities, sewage lines, emergency access roads, power lines, phone lines, water mains, fire hydrants, and so on, that only expensive houses will yield a worthwhile return on investment.

The residents seem sure there is a lot wrong with this image of land development, but what options do they have to discover, understand, and articulate a better image? Is this something the Planning Board should be providing?

Planning Board

Of course the Board is required to enforce the bylaws impartially, and must appear to remain and unbiased judge in the hearing process. However, it seemed clear to me the individuals comprising the Board, as private citizens, would prefer nor more tract-style developments.

The responsibilities of the Planning Board are defined in the Town of Cohasset General Bylaws. These include administration of subdivision control, site plan reviews, and "The Planning Board shall from time to time study needs and potential of the Town..." I think a study is needed now. To discover if it is the will of the residents to have no more tract-style development. To offer the residents alternative visions of Cohasset's future, including alternative development. To offer the residents alternative visions of Cohasset's future, including alternative development. To discover if there are sorts of development the residents would want?

The Developers

The developers don't intend to be the bad guys. It's clear they're in the development business and need to produce a certain return on investment, like any other for-profit business. How can you criticize the entrepreneurship of the American Way?

But curiously I sense some acceptance of the role of unscrupulous developer by this applicant. Maybe being considered an unscrupulous developer eventually takes its toll. Maybe as private citizens they too sense something wrong with tract-style development. Maybe they would prefer to build places which residents truly wanted. But where in the Zoning Bylaws or Subdivision Regulations are any alternatives?

To Be Continued

The applicants had presented their plans, the residents had objected, and the Board continued the hearing to their next meeting. It seemed to me like a runaway train. With persistence, the availability of Town sewer, willingness to negotiate on density, and the final resort of a lawsuit, the developer will eventually obtain approval. The residents and Board will feel helpless to stop something they feel is wrong. And it will keep happening.

If enough readers have similar thoughts, maybe it is time for the Planning Board to explore alternatives and arrange a public forum. Please contact the Planning Board if you feel this way.

Steroids can have dangerous side effects

(The Committee thanks the Cohasset Police Department for this article. Information on steroids was obtained from the Controlled Substance Field Manual, Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council, Commonwealth of Massachusetts)

D & A COMMITTEE

With increased emphasis given to winning in athletics, one substance increasingly abused over the past 10 years is steroids. In 1990, Congress placed steroids on the controlled substance list. Now, possession of illicitly obtained steroids carries a maximum penalty of one year in prison and a minimum $1,000 fine.

Steroids are synthetic derivatives of testosterone, a natural male hormone. There are two major types of steroids, anabolic and androgenic. Steroids are usually taken orally in pill form or through injections. Some users have chosen steroids to enhance their athletic performance or to improve their physique. Many steroid trafficking investigations lead to fitness clubs. Gyms that attract bodybuilders are one location where the distribution of steroids may occur.

Steroids are drugs that can have many dangerous side effects. The potential side effects of steroid use include severe mood swings ranging from violent even suicidal episodes, known as "Roid Rage," to bouts with depression. Other side effects include acne, jaundice, swelling of the feet or ankles, high blood pressure, liver damage and cancer. The testosterone-like substance in steroids produces a different physical reaction in males than in females.

There are valid medical uses of steroids. Under a physician's care, they can be used in treating cases of anemia, osteoporosis, endometriosis and even insect bites. Just like any other prescription drug, steroids should not be taken without a specific medical purpose and doctor's authorization .

D & A Committee to start call-in help line

By Stacey K. Powers
CORRESPONDENT

The Drug & Alcohol Committee has received a $2,000 grant from the Bell Atlantic Foundation that will be used for costs related to establishing a drug and alcohol help line in the Social Service League office at St. Stephen's Church. The group announced its intention to create this community service in January and the grant will enable it to be up and running within a month's time.

Staffed by committee member Bob Harold, a professional drug and alcohol counselor, the help line will be open on Tuesday nights from 6 to 10 p.m. for substance abuse help. Citizens are encouraged to call in with any questions regarding substance abuse problems. Any callers who need assistance outside those hours of operation can leave a confidential message. Harold will check the messages and return calls.

At its last meeting, the committee also heard a status report on the upcoming Antique Car Show from organizers Ken Thayer and Police officer John Small. The fund-raiser will be held during Harborfest on Sunday June, 7 at the South Shore Chevrolet dealership on Route 3A. The show will charge an entry fee for cars and have a donation box for pedestrians of approximately $1-2 dollars. Running from 7 a.m. - 4 p.m., the show will also have refreshment stands and feature several raffles for the public.

One particular car that is expected is a wooden car entirely hand-crafted and valued at approximately $125,000. Cohasset resident Glenn Pratt generously donated $2,500 that will fund the cost of the trophies and plaques to be awarded at the show. Although the program booklet is already in print production, the show is still accepting donations from area businesses and residents alike.

In other business, the committee will transfer $2,635.80 to the Cohasset Youth Resources Committee for use in the Garage rehabilitation project. This project is still accepting monetary donations as well as donations of supplies to create a teen center which student organizer Tony Bramblett estimates will require approximately $16,000-18,000 to complete.

The Committee also approved the donation of $250 to the 1998 Prom Night Lock-In.

Good news for the tobacco industry?

They say that if you wait long enough what goes around, comes around, like black will be white and good will be evil.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

This is apparently true.

I just read the other day that science has discovered that — get ready for this now — smoking is good for you .

Well, maybe "good" isn't exactly the right word but the Journal of the National Cancer Institute has found that the incidence of breast cancer is 54 per cent lower among women smokers who have the BRCA gene mutation, whatever that is.

This is the best news the tobacco industry has had since Jeanne Calment of Arles, France, the world's oldest living person, told her 120th birthday party that she smokes two cigarettes a day.

Liggett & Myers stock soared when the AP wire carried the word to North Carolina.

Jean-Sebastien Brunet, who authored the report in the Journal, said the study examined the breast cancer history of 372 women, half smokers, half non-smokers, to reach their politically incorrect conclusion.

"If a woman smoked up to four pack years, the reduction was 35 per cent," he said. "For four or more pack years, the reduction was 54 per cent."

A pack year — and I knew you were going to ask this — is equal to smoking one pack a day for a year so a four pack year would be four packs a day for a year or one pack a day for four years.

"Smoking may reduce breast cancer risk for these women, but cigarettes sharply increase the incidence of other cancers," said Brunet. "The study is interesting scientifically, but it should not encourage anyone to smoke."

In other words, the mutated gene will protect you from breast cancer, even as you lie dying from cancer of the lung.

If I were the tobacco industry, I'd hire a high-powered public relations man to give the world the word about the institute's study.

Someone like the Marlboro Man, for instance, if only the rugged outdoorsman, David McLean, who was always lighting up in those TV commercials, hadn't died of lung cancer a couple of years ago.

I though they'd take the heat off of cigarettes a few years ago — particularly among the second hand smoke people — when it was discovered that some vegetables contain nicotine, the drug that makes tobacco addictive.

Five ounces of potatoes or two-thirds of an ounce of pureed tomatoes, for instance, have the same amount of nicotine as a non-smoker would get from breathing a small amount of cigarette smoke for three hours.

I'm sure the tobacco industry rejoiced at the news until Jack Henningfield of the National Institute on Drug Abuse figured out that "you would have to eat a whole garden worth of vegetables to get the same amount of nicotine from one cigarette."

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company thought they had the second hand smoke problem licked 10 years ago when they unveiled a new "smokeless": cigarette, the Premier, that released nicotine without combustion.

Philip Morris Companies figured they had broken the smoke barrier with their Superslims for women, which emitted 70 per cent less smoke from its lit end by wrapping the tobacco in two layers of porous and non-porous paper.

Of course, it only worked on those with mutated BRCA genes.

Town's Greenbush report isn't pretty committee says

houses near the tracks.

But the Greenbush Mitigation Committee members expressed surprise and dismay Wednesday about the very different findings supplied by their consultant Peter Goldberg of Tech Environmental in Waltham. The firm was hired last month to report on air, noise and vibrations. In a meeting last week to review the data, the panel members said parts of the consultant's report astonished them.

"It adds a dimension to the project I wasn't aware of," Gruber said. He deemed the report "substantially better" than he expected. "There's enough meat in here" to build a strategy for negotiating with the T, he said.

But his colleagues Michael Dick and selectwoman Nan Roth also expressed dismay about the study. It showed the T must do far more than it planned to truly compensate residents of Cohasset for the inconvenience of hosting the train. Roth said Cohasset would never be able to persuade the T it has to get serious about mitigation if the costs could go as high as the report suggested. Dick said it seemed like a waste of time to bring the report to the T's attention because the agency has previously rejected similar discoveries.

"We're tilting at windmills when it comes right down to it," Dick told Gruber and urged the panel to bypass the T and seek help from other authorities. He favored another meeting with Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, the head of the House Transportation Committee. He also suggested bringing the report to U.S. Rep. William Delahunt's office.

In a telephone interview yesterday Gruber said the committee has lots of ideas about how to use the report but will start by presenting the findings to the selectmen. The bottom line is the T has not made the case for building Greenbush in the first place. The T has also failed to prove the new train will not damage the quality of life in Cohasset.

MBTA overstated benefits

The report exposed the fact the T has overestimated the benefits of building the train. For instance, the T has claimed the Greenbush line will improve air quality by getting cars off the road. But the agency overstated the benefit because it only deducted the pollution from the cars it figured would stay home while their owners rode the rails. It never added back the emissions the train will spew. The T also picked unrealistic models to estimate car pollution. Its scenario presumed cars on Route 3 and Route 3A traveled at average speeds of 19.6 mph when 40 mph would be more realistic. At the lower speeds the cars would stay on the road longer and pollute more. Finally, the T did not take state-mandated low emission regulations into consideration. Because the T based its estimates on bad data, it necessarily drew the wrong conclusion about the advantages of building Greenbush.

"Thus it is no surprise the T's report concludes incorrectly building alternative transportation would reduce air pollution," said Gruber summarizing the document.

Air quality

The Greenbush line will also "unnecessarily increase regional ozone levels" if the T does not take steps to meet new federal emission standards for diesel locomotives. Currently, no standards apply, though the train can be expected to add 76 tons of nitrous oxides every year to the air supply along the corridor. The Environmental Protection Agency last month established a new mark to be phased in over the years 2000 to 2005. It would cut the amount of nitrous oxides in the air by 58 percent. Yet commuter rail lines, like Greenbush, can avoid the new regulations until the year 2007 if the T takes advantage of a special exemption. The consultant suggested asking the T to "waive its right to the exemption."

As Dick put it, building the Greenbush will not be effective if the train is as bad as the cars. The South Shore has an ozone problem due to a combination of man-made and natural causes. The problem is acute for people who suffer from asthma and other breathing difficulties.

Locomotive noise

The noise from the train's engines was another item the T underestimated. Simply put, a lot of people are going to wake up from a sound sleep when the train roars. That is because the actual sound is louder than the T has indicated and the area where it reverberates is bigger. In the worst case scenario, on a summer night when the house windows facing the track are open, the train will jolt people within 800 feet of the track on both sides.

"That's an eye opener," said Gruber. It meant the T's mitigation effort should potentially extend across a 1600 foot "swath" on both sides of the tracks. That is a far bigger space than the T intended to treat by installing rubber mats to reduce the noise. But the news discouraged Roth because the T will never agree to take such measures.

"Think what it would do in the other towns," she said where more houses stand close to the tracks. If Cohasset struck a bargain with the T, towns like Weymouth and Braintree might try the same tactic. The costs would be astronomical. As Gruber put it, even though Cohasset might be talking about 1600 feet on the 3.5 miles of track winding through the town, the problem was "generic to the whole corridor."

Roth and the rest of the panel said the dilemma now was to decide what to do with this information.

"We've got a tiger by the tail," Roth and Gruber both said.

Army Corps criticizes MBTA study with the findings in the report and plans to make a strong case for itself at a June 3 meeting with the Corps.

"Further analysis is not necessary," he said. "The MBTA will point out flaws in the study. We feel we have done a thorough analysis of all the transportation alternatives, and hope the Corps will see it our way."

But Ted Lento, spokesman for the Corps, said the agency stands by the document.

"There has been three months of detailed study, based on data in our files, input from the MBTA and public comment, as well as information from our own research," he said. "Unless the MBTA presents us with new information, there aren't any new issues. We're not operating in a vacuum."

The June 3 meeting also has another purpose, according to Lento.

At that time, the federal Environmental Protection Agency has promised to provide information requested by the Corps nine months ago regarding air-quality issues associated with the proposed Greenbush restoration.

"Will diesel train emissions contribute to, or reduce, pollution? In other words, is the cure worse than the disease?" Lento asked, who said there are "a whole host of other issues not yet resolved."

Those include information about the Greenbush layover station in Scituate and the impact on the Town Brook in Hingham.

Veterans turn out to recall fallen comrades

lering sacrifices paid on distant battlefields.

Perroncello thanked his fellow soldiers who turned out by the dozens during the exercises at Veterans Memorial Park.

"Thanks comrades," he said.. "It's wonderful to see you. It means we're still able to do it. See you again next year, God willing."

In his remarks, former POW and keynote speaker Timothy B. Sullivan of Pond Street, reminded the crowd that remembering POWs during the Vietnam War made a huge difference.

He thanked those who wore the POW bracelets that included the name of the soldier.

"Our treatment improved," said Sullivan, a Navy pilot who was shot down in November 1967 and held captive for six years. He said North Vietnam was surprised that the government cared enough about the POWs to go to such extremes to create awareness.

Sullivan said America enjoys freedom today because people were willing to make sacrifices and follow through on their ideals. "We are the land of the free because we are the home of the brave," he said.

Mary Jeanette Murray, 73, of Margin Street is still trim enough to fit comfortably into her US Marine Corps uniform.

She's made the seven-mile march that includes veterans, bands, and scouts and wends its way through town stopping at cemeteries and memorials since she was five years old. Her late father, Nathaniel Hurwitz, served as state commissioner of veterans services.

"Memorial Day was special," the state representative said. "Next to Christmas, it was the most important day in our household."

Seniors urged to defend against scams

By Stacie Charbonneau Gregory
CORRESPONDENT

Every five months there are some 1,200 reports of crime and fraud against senior citizens. Criminals tend to prey on vulnerable seniors, hoping to bilk them out of cash by luring them into scams.

Preventing such incidents involves education and support from law enforcement. That was the message conveyed last week by two area district attorneys.

Plymouth County D.a. Michael Sullivan and Norfolk County D.A. Jeffrey Locke brought their message of prevention to seniors at a forum Friday at the Cohasset Knoll Skilled Nursing and Rehabilitation Facility off Route 3A at the Hingham/Cohasset line.

The common goal of this community outreach program is to empower the senior population through education, to prevent crime in the first place by keeping seniors aware of potentially dangerous situations or people. The district attorneys are not simply talking to seniors and letting them fend for themselves; several programs are in place to provide them with tangible assistance in time of doubt, fear or danger.

The Norfolk District Attorney's Office has created a program called "Successful Seniority," — a community outreach program that offers support to seniors in need. It seeks to educate seniors by keeping them aware of "scams" targeted toward their vulnerabilities. Similarly, Sullivan's office has created the "Senior Protection Team" and publishes a quarterly newsletter focusing on the issues of elder abuse and prevention.

Prevention is the key word in both campaigns, and each one's ultimate goal. It is not just the unthinkable tales of elder abuse the offices wish to prevent, but also the other crimes involving fraud and neglect that are committed on seniors. For example, Locke pointed out the innocent-looking sweepstakes notice received in the mail. Though several of the contests are legitimate, many more are not, he said.

It is often difficult to decipher a fraudulent sweepstakes notice because they pattern themselves so closely off the "real" ones. Locke tells the story of a trusting senior who believed with all her heart she had won a car, and had gone so far as to choose the color and invite friends over on the supposed day of its arrival. She had been advised by the sweepstakes to send a certified check to cover the "sales tax" on the prize vehicle. Needless to say, the woman lost her money, and a little bit of her faith in humankind.

The common goal of this community outreach program is to empower the senior population through education, to prevent crime in the first place by keeping seniors aware of potentially dangerous situations or people.

Situations like this, Locke said, should send out a red flag to seniors. When someone asks you to send money or leave a "check in the mailbox" it is right to be suspicious.

And it isn't just through the mail that "scam artists" work. The telephone is a handy tool as well. A new way of avoiding calling collect when away from home is to call your own home and have someone dial the numbers 9 and then 0 and hang up. The phone calls you make after that will be billed to your home. A prison inmate got a hold of this information and called his long distance drug contacts from jail by duping an innocent senior into pressing 90 by impersonating a representative of the telephone company.
